

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. § 1072. Definition of Marriage.

The word "marriage" signifies, in the first instance, that act by which a man and woman unite for life, with the intent to discharge towards society and one another those duties which result from the relation of husband and wife. The act of union having been once accomplished, the word comes afterwards to denote the relation itself. Marriage is more than a contract and is the civil status of a man and woman united to perform the duties of the relation¹ in which the State is deeply interested.² Every marriage is a marriage for all purposes and whatever its form is attended with all the civil rights.³ A common-law marriage is any mutual agreement between the parties to be husband and wife in praesenti.⁴

§ 1073. Marriage More Than a Civil Contract.

It has been frequently said in the courts of this country that marriage is nothing more than a civil contract⁵ to which the State is a party⁶ favored in the law.⁷ That it is a contract is doubtless true to a certain extent, since the law always presumes two parties of competent understanding who enter into a mutual agreement, which becomes executed, as it were, by the act of marriage. But this agreement differs essentially from all others. This contract of the parties is simply to enter into a certain status or relation. The rights and obligations of that status are fixed by society in accordance with principles of natural law, and are beyond and above the parties themselves. They may make settlements and regulate the property rights of each other; but they cannot modify the terms upon which they are to live together, nor superadd to the relation a single condition. Being once bound they are bound forever. Mutual consent, as in all contracts, brings them together; but mutual consent cannot part them.⁸

Death alone dissolves the tie—unless the legislature, in the exercise of a rightful authority, interposes by general or special ordinance to pronounce a solemn divorce; and this it should do only when the grossly immoral conduct of one contracting party brings unmerited shame upon the other, disgraces an innocent offspring, and inflicts a wound upon the community. So in other respects the law of marriage differs from that of ordinary contracts. For, as concerns the parties themselves, mental capacity is not the only test of fitness, but physical capacity likewise—a new element for consideration, no less important than the other. Again, the encumbrance of an existing union operates here as a special disqualification. Blood relationship is another. So, too, an infant's capacity is treated on peculiar principles, as far as the marriage contract is concerned, for he can marry young and be bound by his marriage. Third parties cannot attack a marriage because of its injury to their own interests. International law relaxes its usual requirements in favor of marriage. And finally the formal celebration now prevalent, both in England and America, is something peculiar to the marriage contract; and in its performance we see but the faintest analogy to the execution and delivery of a sealed instrument.

The earnestness with which so many of our American progenitors insisted upon the contract view of marriage may be ascribed in part to their hatred of the Papacy and ritualism, and their determination to escape the conclusion that marriage was a sacrament. By no people have the marriage vows been more sacredly performed than by ours down to a period, at all events, comparatively recent.

We are then to consider marriage not as a contract in the ordinary acceptation of the term; but as a contract sui generis, if, indeed, it be a contract at all; as an agreement to enter into a solemn relation which imposes its own terms. On the one hand discarding the unwarranted dogmas of the church of Rome, by which marriage is elevated to the character of a sacrament, on the other we repudiate that dry definition with which the lawgiver or jurist sometimes seeks to impose upon the natural instincts of mankind. We adopt such views as the distinguished Lord Robertson held.⁹ And Judge Story observes of marriage: "It appears to me something more than a mere contract. It is rather to be deemed an institution of society founded upon the consent and contract of the parties; and in this view it has some peculiarities in its nature, character, operation, and extent of obligation, different from what belongs to ordinary contracts."¹⁰ So Fraser, while defining marriage as a contract, adds in forcible language: "Unlike other contracts, it is one instituted by God himself, and has its foundation in the law of nature. It is the parent, not the child, of civil society."¹¹ And we may add that a recent American text-writer, of high repute upon the subject, not only pronounces for this doctrine, after a careful examination of all the authorities, but ascribes the chief embarrassment of American tribunals, in questions arising under the conflict of marriage and divorce laws, to the custom of applying the rules of ordinary contracts to the marriage relation.¹²

Marriage is something more than a mere contract as when the contract to marry is executed by the marriage a relation between the parties is created which they cannot change. It is an institution in the maintenance of which in its purity the public is deeply interested.¹³

That a State legislature is not precluded from regulating the marriage institution under any constitutional interdiction of acts impairing the obligation of contracts, or interfering with private rights and immunities, has frequently been asserted.¹⁴ And as to

An ante-nuptial agreement that no cohabitation should follow the marriage is void as against public policy and either party may repudiate it after marriage.²⁴ § 1079. Eugenics Statute.

The State of Wisconsin did in 1913 pass a law widely known as the eugenics statute requiring from men only a certificate of freedom from venereal disease before a license to marry would be issued. This law was widely debated and sharply fought in the legislature and after its passage its constitutionality was attacked.

The court held that the power of the State to control and regulate by reasonable laws the marriage relation and to prevent the contracting of marriage by persons afflicted with loathsome or hereditary diseases which are liable either to be transmitted to the spouse or inherited by the offspring, or both, must be regarded as undeniable. Society has a right to protect itself from extinction and its members from a fate worse than death.

The court holds that the fact that the law applies to men only does not make it unconstitutional as it is common knowledge that practically all women who marry are pure while men are not and the evil sought to be remedied is caused by diseased men marrying decent women.

The law requires the examining physician to certify that the applicant is free from venereal disease as nearly as can be ascertained by physical examination and by the application of the recognized clinical and laboratory tests of scientific search. There was evidence that the recognized test for syphilis was the Wasserman test which required elaborate instruments, that practically none of the physicians of the State were prepared to use it and that the expense of the test was all out of proportion to the legal fee fixed of three dollars. The court holds, however, that as the Wasserman test is unnecessary in the great majority of cases it could not have been required and that there is nothing unconstitutional about the act.²⁵ § 1080. Effect on Revocation of Will or Discharge of School Teachers.

At common law a will made by a feme sole was revoked by her subsequent marriage as marriage destroyed the ambulatory character of the will and left it no longer subject to the wife's control, but statutes conferring full testamentary capacity on married women have removed the reason for the rule and consequently the rule itself has ceased and marriage no longer revokes the will of an unmarried woman.²⁶

There are cases, however, holding that the marriage of a woman creates such a change in her circumstances with new moral duties and obligations that it does of itself revoke the will,²⁷ but this creates an inconsistency as the marriage of a man does not revoke

VOID AND VOIDABLE MARRIAGES.

SECTION 1081. Distinction.

1082. Putative Marriage.

1083. Marriage Prohibited by Statute.

1084. Ratification of Void Marriage by Cohabitation.

1085. Property Rights Arising from Void Marriage.

1085a. Duty to Support Plural Wives.

§ 1081. Distinction.

A distinction is made at law between void and voidable marriages. This distinction, which appears to have originated in a conflict between the English ecclesiastical and common-law courts, was first announced in a statute passed during the reign of Henry VIII; and it is also to be found in succeeding marriage and divorce acts down to the present day. The distinction of void and voidable applies not to the legal consequences of an imperfect marriage, once formally dissolved, but to the status of the parties and their offspring before such dissolution. A void marriage is a mere nullity, and its validity may be impeached in any court, whether the question arise directly or collaterally, and whether the parties be living or dead. But a voidable marriage is valid for all civil purposes until a competent tribunal has pronounced the sentence of nullity, upon direct proceedings instituted for the purpose of setting the marriage aside. Hence we see that, while a void marriage makes cohabitation at all times unlawful and bastardizes the issue, a voidable marriage protects intercourse between the parties for the time being, furnishes the usual incidents of survivorship, such as curtesy and dower, and encourages the propagation of children. But the moment the sentence of nullity is pronounced, the shield of the law falls, the incidents vanish, and innocent offspring are exposed to the world as bastards; and herein is the greatest hardship of a voidable marriage.

The old rule is that civil disabilities, such as idiocy and fraud, render a marriage void; while the canonical impediments, such as consanguinity and impotence, make it voidable only. This test was never a clear one, and it has become of little practical consequence at the present day. Statutes both in England and America have greatly modified the ancient law of valid marriages, and it can only be affirmed in general terms that the legislative tendency is to make marriages voidable rather than void, wherever the impediment is such as might not have been readily known to both parties before marriage; and where public policy does not rise superior to all considerations of private utility. Modern civilization strongly condemns the harsh doctrine of ab initio sentences of nullity; and such sentences have now in general a prospective force only, in order that rights already vested may remain unimpaired, and, still more, that children may not suffer for the follies of their parents,³¹ and it is the general rule to-day that a marriage legally celebrated is considered valid until annulled in a direct action.³²

§ 1082. Putative Marriage.

A "putative marriage" is one which is in reality null, but which has been contracted in good faith by the two parties or by one of them.³³

§ 1083. Marriage Prohibited by Statute.

A marriage in contravention of a statute which merely prohibits the marriage is voidable only,³⁴ as unlawful marriages are not DISQUALIFICATION BY BLOOD OR AFFINITY.

- SECTION 1087. Nature and History.
1088. English Rule.
1089. Rule in This Country.
1090. Affinity by Marriage.
1091. Voidable or Void.
1092. Knowledge of Parties.

§ 1087. Nature and History.

On no point have writers of all ages and countries been more united than in the conviction that nature abhors, as vile and unclean, all sexual intercourse between persons of near relationship. But on few subjects have they differed more widely as in the application of this conviction. Among Eastern nations, since the days of the patriarchs, practices have prevailed which to Christian nations and in days of civilized refinement, seem shocking and strange. The difficulty then is, not in discovering that there is some prohibition by God's law, but in ascertaining how far that prohibition extends. This difficulty is manifested in our language by the use of two terms—consanguinity and affinity; one of which covers the terra firma of incestuous marriages, the other offers debatable ground. The disqualification of consanguinity applies to marriages between blood relations in the lineal or ascending and descending lines. There can be but one opinion concerning the union of relations as near as brother and sister. The limit of prohibition among remote collateral kindred has, however, been differently assigned in different countries. The English canonical rule is that of the Jewish law. The Greeks and Romans recognized like principles, though with various modifications and alterations of opinion.

§ 1088. English Rule.

The church of the Middle Ages found in the institution of marriage, once placed among the sacraments, a most powerful lever of social influence. The English ecclesiastical courts made use of this disqualification, extending it to the seventh degree of canonical reckoning in some cases, and beyond all reasonable bounds.⁴⁵ So intolerable became this oppression, that a statute passed in the time of Henry VIII forbade these courts thenceforth to draw in question marriages without the Levitical degree, "not prohibited by God's law."⁴⁶ Under this statute, which is still essentially in force in England, the impediment has been treated as applicable to the whole ascending and descending line, and further, as extending to the third degree of the civil reckoning inclusive; or in other words, so as to prohibit all marriages nearer than first cousins. Archbishop Parker's table of degrees, which recognizes these limits, has been, since 1563, the standard adopted in the English ecclesiastical courts.⁴⁷ The statute prohibition includes legitimate § 1089. Rule in This Country.

In this country various rules have been laid down by statute as to what is an incestuous marriage, and marriages have been prohibited between cousins,⁴⁹ uncle and niece.⁵⁰

§ 1090. Affinity by Marriage.

The English law places affinity on the same footing as consanguinity as an impediment. Affinity is the relationship which arises from marriage between a husband and his wife's kindred, and vice versa. It is shown that while the marriage of persons allied by blood produces offspring feeble in body and tending to insanity, that of persons connected by affinity leads to no such result; and further, that consanguinity has been everywhere recognized as an impediment, but not affinity. The worst that can probably be said of the latter is, that it leads to confusion of domestic rights and duties. No question has been discussed with more earnestness in both England and America, with less positive result, than one which turns upon this very distinction; namely, whether a man may marry his deceased wife's sister. This question has received a favorable response in Vermont, and universally in this country.⁵¹ But in England such marriages were deemed incestuous, and within the prohibition of God's law, and the House of Lords resisted all legislative change in this respect,⁵² until 1907, when the passage of the Deceased Wife's Sister Law made such marriages valid. Even after the passage of this act a minister refused to administer communion to a couple who had married under its provisions on the ground that they were "notorious evil livers";⁵³ and it has been recently held at nisi prius that a marriage by a woman with her deceased husband's brother is void.⁵⁴

Cas. 263 (not where marriage of niece forbidden by statute after marriage took place).

Marriage between an uncle and niece has been treated as incestuous. Harrison v. State, 22 Md. 468; Bowers v. Bowers, 10 Rich. Eq. 551.

Statutes prohibiting unions between persons related by marriage are strictly construed in this country, as, for example, a statute prohibiting a marriage between a man and his son's wife does not prohibit marriage with his son's widow,⁵⁵ and under a statute prohibiting a marriage between a man and his wife's daughter a marriage is valid between a man and the daughter of his divorced wife, as when the divorce was granted the daughter ceased to be the daughter of his wife.⁵⁶

§ 1091. Voidable or Void.

Marriages within the forbidden degrees of consanguinity were formerly only voidable in English law; but by modern statutes

51. Blodget v. Brinsmaid, 9 Vt. 27; Paddock v. Wells, 2 Barb. Ch. 331. Collamer, J., in *Blodget v. Therefore, though a man is, by affinity, brother to his wife's sister, yet, upon the death of his wife, he may lawfully marry her sister."

they have been made null and void. In this country they are generally pronounced void by statute (that is to say, void from the time the sentence is pronounced⁵⁷), and the offending parties are liable to imprisonment. But with regard to marriages among relatives by affinity, the rule is not so stringent as in England.⁵⁸

Under statutes declaring a marriage between first cousins absolutely void both where the marriage was celebrated and where the parties live, such a marriage is void and confers no rights on the widow to homestead, and the nullity may be set up in the homestead proceedings.⁵⁹

The fact that the marriage was entered into knowingly by the parties does not prevent it from being declared void as incestuous.⁶⁰

§ 1093. At Common Law.

Race, color, and social rank do not appear to constitute an impediment to marriage at the common law, nor is any such impediment now recognized in England.⁶¹

§ 1094. Slaves.

Slaves were incapable of marriage as of entering into other contracts,⁶² although such a marriage may have a certain moral force and may be confirmed after emancipation,⁶³ and a customary marriage of slaves is voidable only, and where not disaffirmed the children inherit.⁶⁴

A statute permitting the marriage of slaves with the consent of their masters did not dispense with the celebration of nuptials,⁶⁵ but a statute declaring certain negroes husband and wife does not require an express agreement that the parties take one another as husband and wife.⁶⁶

⁶⁶ Lemons v. Harris, 115 Va. 809, 80 S. E. 740.

The thirteenth article of amendment to the Constitution gives Congress power to enforce the abolition of slavery "by appropriate legislation." As to persons formerly slaves, there are now acts of Congress which legitimate their past cohabitation, and enable them to drop the fetters of concubinage. And the manifest tendency of the day is towards removing all legal impediments of rank and condition, leaving individual tastes and social manners to impose the only restrictions of this nature.⁶⁷

Accordingly we now find in most Southern States, where slavery existed until abolished by supreme authority of the United States, statutes which expressly legalize the marriages of former slaves and persons of the colored race who continued to cohabit as husband and wife after such emancipation, and which legitimate their previous offspring.⁶⁸ But subsequent emancipation would not be thought to resuscitate a slave marriage or cohabitation previously dissolved;⁶⁹ nor would what slaves understood to be their merely illicit companionship come within the purview of such statutes.⁷⁰

Where slaves are married and continue to live together as husband and wife after emancipation their marriage will be recognized,⁷¹ as will be that of a slave who ran away to a free State and was there married before the emancipation of the slaves,⁷² and the marriage of slaves may be proved by reputation.⁷³

§ 1095. Indian Marriages.

Marriages between Indians while members of Indian tribes will be sustained if in accordance with Indian customs,⁷⁴ but after they become citizens of a State their marriage must then comply with State law.⁷⁵

"The courts of the American Union have, from an early time, recognized the validity of marriages contracted between the members of any Indian tribe in accordance with the laws and customs of such tribe, where the tribal relations and government existed at the time of the marriage, and there was no Federal statute rendering the tribal customs or laws invalid; and such marriages between a member of an Indian tribe and a white person not a member of such tribe have been held and regarded as valid, the same as such marriages between members of the tribe. And the same effect is given to the dissolution of the marriage under the customs of the tribe as is given to the marriage relation itself."⁷⁶ Such a marriage is not a common-law marriage but a legal marriage according to the customs of the Indians, which customs are the laws recognized by Congress concerning and regulating their domestic relations.⁷⁷

A marriage between an Indian woman and a half-breed member of an Indian tribe is not a "common-law" marriage, but a marriage under the laws and customs of the tribe to which the § 1096. Marriages Between White and Colored Persons.

By local statutes in some of the United States, intermarriage has long been discouraged between persons of the negro, Indian, and white races.⁷⁹ And Southern policy, furthermore, still treats the amalgamation of races with great disfavor; not only prohibiting marriage between whites and negroes, as before the downfall of slavery, but in some States punishing the offending parties as criminals;⁸⁰ though apparently regarding the colored mistresses of white men more leniently.⁸¹

Where prohibitions exist against marriages between white and colored persons by statute such marriages are absolutely void,⁸² as are marriages between white persons and Indians.⁸³

§ 1099. In General.

No one can contract a valid marriage unless capable at the time of giving an intelligent consent. Hence the marriages of idiots, lunatics, and all others who have not the use of their understanding, are now treated as null; though the rule was formerly otherwise, from, perhaps, too great regard to the sanctity of the institution in the English ecclesiastical courts.⁸⁶

§ 1100. Capacity to Contract as Test.

Marriage cannot be valid without mental capacity sufficient to contract⁸⁷ although by statute such marriages may be valid until annulled.⁸⁸

A marriage may be annulled where one of the parties was at no time of sufficient mental capacity to make a contract or understand the nature of the marriage relation⁸⁰ but annulment will not be granted where this does not appear,⁸⁰ but mental weakness or unsoundness not sufficient to invalidate a contract will not avoid a marriage.⁸¹

§ 1101. Weakness of Mind.

Mere weakness of mind not amounting to insanity is not a ground for annulling a marriage. "It would be dangerous, perhaps, as well as difficult, to prescribe the precise degree of mental vigor, soundness, and capacity essential to the validity of such an engagement; which after all, in many cases, depends more on sentiments of mutual esteem, attachment, and affection, which the weakest may feel as well as the strongest intellects, than on the exercise of a clear, unclouded reason or sound judgment, or intelligent discernment and discrimination, and in which it differs in a very important respect from all other civil contracts."⁸²

What degree of insanity will amount to disqualification is not easily determined; so varied are the manifestations of mental disorder at the present day, and so gradually does mere feebleness of intellect shade off into hopeless idiocy. Certain it is that a person may enter into a valid marriage, notwithstanding he has a mental delusion on certain subjects, is eccentric in his habits, or is possessed of a morbid temperament, provided he displays soundness in other respects and can manage his own affairs with ordinary prudence and skill.⁹³ Every case stands on its own merits; but the usual test applied in the courts is that of fitness for the general transactions of life; for, it is argued, if a man is incapable of entering into other contracts, neither can he contract marriage.⁹⁴ This test is sufficiently precise for most purposes. Yet we apprehend the real issue is whether the man is capable of entering understandingly into the relation of marriage; for natural impulses are so strong that a man may know well the contract he assumes by the act of marriage, while he is not equally fit to enter into other engagements. There are two questions, however: first, whether the party understands the marriage contract; second, whether he is fit to perform understandingly the momentous obligations which that contract imposes; and both elements might well enter into the consideration of each case. "If any contract more than another," observes Lord Penzance in a recent English case, "is capable of being invalidated on the ground of the insanity of either of the contracting parties, it should be the contract of marriage — an act by which the parties bind their property and their persons for the rest of their lives."⁹⁵

§ 1103. Lucid Intervals; Temporary Insanity, &c.

Marriage contracted during a lucid interval is at law deemed valid;⁹⁶ but the English statute provides that such marriages are void when a commission of lunacy has once been taken out and remains unrevoked.⁹⁷ Similar provisions are to be found in some of our States. On the other hand, marriage contracted by a person habitually sane, during temporary insanity, is unquestionably void,⁹⁸ as of course would be any marriage contracted by one at the time permanently insane. Strange behavior at, and shortly before and after, the nuptials, at the last stage of the engagement, at the wedding breakfast or reception, on the wedding journey, and so on, are quite material as part of the res gestæ, upon the general issue of marriage disqualification at the time of the ceremony. Where, as so often happens, the malady develops soon after, the question is, whether the mind of the contracting party was diseased or not at the time of the contract or ceremony so far as to render that party unfit to contract the marriage. If, as Lord Penzance has ruled, the evidence establishes that it was so diseased, the extent of the derangement is immaterial.⁹⁹ And yet so important is it to make the time of consummating this contract the focus of inquiry, that a marriage has been upheld, notwithstanding the husband was, two days after the wedding, adjudged insane under an inquisition of lunacy pending, as his wife knew, at the time of the marriage.¹ Insanity, occurring subsequently to the marriage, is no cause for annulling the marriage, nor, in general, for procuring a divorce;² neither would mere evidence of hereditary taint in the defendant's family suffice for dissolving the conjugal relation.³

§ 1104. Marriages, How Annulled for Insanity; Marriages Confirmed.

Suits of nullity, brought to ascertain the facts of insanity, are favored by law both in England and America; and modern legislation discountenances all collateral disputes involving questions so painful and perplexing. "Though marriage with an idiot or lunatic be absolutely void, and no sentence of avoidance be absolutely necessary," says Chancellor Kent, "yet, as well for the sake of the good order of society, as for the peace of mind of all persons concerned, it is expedient that the nullity of the marriage should be ascertained and declared by the decree of a court of competent jurisdiction."⁴ In many States this is now the only course to be pursued, such marriages being treated as voidable and not void; and the insane spouse dying before proceedings to dissolve the marriage are begun, the survivor takes all the benefits of a valid marriage accordingly.⁵ Such suits of nullity may be brought by a guardian on behalf of the insane spouse, or by the sane spouse who married in good faith, ignorant that the disability existed.⁶ Upon reasons of justice and policy, and in conformity with the analogy of fraud, force, and error, to be hereafter noticed, we may presume that one who marries while insane may, by cohabitation and other suitable acts, confirm the marriage, if afterwards restored to reason, so as to dispense with further ceremonies,⁷ and that by similar behavior, after knowledge of the disability, the same spouse may become debarred from setting up such insanity on his own behalf. In general, when a couple have lived together as man and wife during their joint lives, it is too late to impugn the marriage afterwards on the ground that the deceased spouse was insane at the time of the nuptials.⁸

Upon the principle of temporary insanity, drunkenness incapacitates, if carried to the excess of delirium tremens; though not, it would appear, if the party intoxicated retains sufficient reason to know what he is doing.⁹ Drunkenness was formerly held a bad plea; for the common law permitted no one to stultify himself; but the modern rule is more reasonable. Some cases require that fraud or unfair advantage should be shown; yet the better opinion is that even this is unnecessary.¹⁰

The mental capacity requisite to a valid marriage is a capacity to understand the nature of the contract and the duties and responsibilities which it creates.¹¹ So one may be found incapable of contracting marriage who has for years indulged excessively in intoxicants so as to be helplessly drunk with frequency and to be unable to concentrate his mind upon a subject under discussion, showing little intelligent interest in his own business affairs, being vacillating and uncertain, as well as suspicious, and showing signs of failing memory, where also he had been drinking heavily at the time of the ceremony, which was undertaken suddenly without preparation. Such a marriage may be annulled where the plaintiff's mental condition did not improve during the time when he was living with the defendant.¹² Intoxication at the time of marriage renders it voidable and not void.¹³ § 1106. Deaf and Dumb Persons.

Deaf and dumb persons were formerly classed as idiots; this notion, however, is exploded. They may now contract marriage by signs.¹⁴ Total blindness, or mere deafness, of course constitutes no incapacity.

§ 1107. Whether Marriage of Incompetents Void or Voidable.

The marriage of one mentally incompetent is void¹⁵ and according to the weight of authority where for want of the requisite mental capacity on the part of one of the parties there has been no consent to the marriage contract the purported marriage is an absolute nullity and will be so decreed in any court and in any proceeding where the question may arise, whether during the lifetime of both of the parties or after the death of either of them. In some States, however, statutes have been passed designed to render marriages of this kind free from attack except in proceedings for annulment brought by or on behalf of one of the parties.¹⁶

SECTION 1108. In General.

- 1118. Estoppel to Complain.
- 1119. Division of Property on Annulment of Marriage of Impotent.

§ 1108. In General.

The question of physical capacity involves an investigation of facts even more painful and humiliating than that of mental capacity. Yet as marriage is instituted, in part at least, for the indulgence of natural cravings and with a view to propagate the human family, sound morality demands that the proper means shall not be wanting. Our law demands that, at all events, the sexual desire may be fully gratified. Where impotence exists, therefore, there can be no valid marriage. By this is meant simply that the sexual organization of both parties shall be complete.¹⁷ § 1109. Capacity to Copulate the Test.

But mere barrenness or incapacity of conception constitutes no legal incapacity in England and the United States, nor can a physical defect which does not interfere with copulation.¹⁸

17. Impotence as cause of divorce, see post, § 1109 et seq.

§ 1110. Extent of Malformation.

The reader will find Dr. Lushington's opinion in the leading case of Deane v. Aveling sufficiently suggestive as to the extent of malformation which invalidates a marriage on the ground of physical incapacity.¹⁹

Where there is a certain degree of variation from the normal in the sexual organs of each party and the difficulty in intercourse between them resulted from these variations taken together, where there would have been no difficulty in intercourse between the husband and any other normal woman and the wife and any other normal man, this is impotency justifying divorce.²⁰

§ 1111. Curable Impotency.

Impotence will not include indeed any disability which is curable, even though not actually cured, unless the party disabled unreasonably refuses to submit to the proper remedies.²¹ A refusal to submit to a slight operation which would cure physical incapacity does not justify annulment, but where a dangerous operation is necessary the incapacity is "incurable."²² Declining opportunity to be cured may render one's physical defect practically incurable for the purposes of judicial sentence; and, moreover, sexual connection not physically impossible, and yet possible only under conditions to which the healthy spouse ought not to resort, may justify a decree in that spouse's favor.²³ We may add that, with the rapid progress of medical science during the present century, cases of absolute and incurable impotence are happily diminishing in number.²⁴ § 1112. Refusal of Intercourse.

The refusal of carnal intercourse by a healthy spouse gives rise to inquiries under the head of divorce;²⁵ while at the same time refusal beyond a reasonable time after marriage may afford a presumption of incapacity, and entitle the offended party to a decree accordingly.²⁶ Such refusal, however, puts the disabled spouse clearly in the wrong; and where, in an English case, a wife fell into hysterics whenever her husband attempted to have connection with her, and for three years refused to submit to medical inspection, the union was dissolved upon his petition.²⁷

§ 1113. Aged Persons.

Annulment cannot be obtained because of the physical incapacity of a person of great age at the time of marriage as one marrying a person of great age cannot expect the usual result of matrimony,²⁸ although to those who marry past the age of child-bearing, nullity on good grounds of impotence has not been refused.²⁹

impotence,³⁰ but an epileptic may be so mentally incompetent that the marriage should be annulled.³¹ § 1115. Venereal Disease.

A marriage may be annulled where one of the parties is at the time of its consummation afflicted with a venereal disease concealed from the other.³² A statute requiring freedom from venereal disease has been construed to mean freedom from acquired and not inherited disease.³³ § 1116. Impotency Arising Subsequent to Marriage.

Physical incapacity arising from some cause subsequent to marriage cannot be referred to the present subject; the question being as to incapacity at the date of marriage.³⁴ § 1117. Void and Not Voidable.

The necessity of judicial sentence, before a marriage can be considered null for impotence or physical incapacity, is too obvious for argument.³⁵ So a marriage entered into in good faith where one of the parties is physically incapable of contracting marriage is voidable and not void³⁶ ab initio and is regarded as valid until regularly dissolved. Therefore under a statute allowing a minor wife to sue in her own name she can do so although after reaching her majority her marriage was annulled on the ground of her malformation.³⁷⁻³⁸ But the decree has gone so far as to render the marriage void ab initio; there being at all events no prosperity to be injuriously affected by so sweeping a sentence, nor much love lost between the conjugal pair whose union comes to so humiliating an end. Jurisdiction is exercised to declare the marriage originally void.

It is held in some of the United States that, in the absence of any express statutory provision therefor, a marriage will not be annulled for impotence.³⁹

§ 1118. Estoppel to Complain.

Suits for impotence ought to be brought within a reasonable time after marriage, as otherwise a waiver of the disqualification may be presumed.⁴⁰ So a husband who lives with his wife for some years during which she has borne children is estopped to bring action to annul the marriage on account of the wife's incapacity at the time of the marriage.⁴¹

§ 1119. Division of Property on Annulment of Marriage of Impotent.

Where a marriage is annulled on account of the physical incapacity of the wife the property accumulated during their marriage by their joint efforts should be divided and the wife given what seems to the court just in view of all the circumstances.

The apportionment of such property between the parties, when not provided by any statute, must be made on equitable principles, and in the absence of special circumstances, such as might arise through intervening claims of third persons, there should be an equal division.⁴²

INFANCY.

- SOURCE 1120. Disqualification of Infancy.

1122. Age of Consent.
1123. Whether Void or Voidable.
1124. Fraud on Infant.
1125. Election to Affirm or Disaffirm.

§ 1120. Disqualification of Infancy.

Infancy may be an impediment to marriage; but only so far, on principle, as the marrying party, by reason of imperfect mental and physical development, may be brought within the reason of the last two rules. Hence we find that infancy is not a bar to marriage to the same extent as in ordinary contracts; since minors cannot repudiate their choice of husband or wife on reaching majority. Not that marriage calls for less discrimination, for it carries with it consequences far beyond all other contracts, involving property rights of the gravest import; but because public policy must protect the marriage institution against the reckless imprudence of individuals.

§ 1121. Minors Over Age of Consent May Marry.

Marriages of infants over the age of consent are as binding as those of adults; marriages within such age may be avoided by either party on reaching the period fixed by law. And even though one of the parties was of suitable age and the other too young, at the time of marriage, yet the former, it appears, may disaffirm as well as the latter.⁴³

⁴³ Co. Litt. 79, and Harg. n. 45; 1 East P. C. 468. But it is not certain that a party of competent age may disaffirm equally with the party incompetent. People v. Slack, 15 Mich. 193.

§ 1122. Age of Consent.

A certain period is established, called the age of consent, which in England is fixed at fourteen for males and twelve for females, a rule adopted from the Roman law, but which, in this country, varies all the way from fourteen to eighteen for males, and twelve to sixteen for females, according to local statutes; differences of climate and physical temperament contributing, doubtless, to make the rule of nature, in this respect, a fluctuating one.⁴⁴

At common law a female of the age of twelve and a male of the age of fourteen were capable of entering into a contract of marriage,⁴⁵ and in the absence of statute the common-law rule governs,⁴⁶ but other rules may be laid down by law.⁴⁷

A statute providing at what ages marriage may be entered into will not change the common-law rule,⁴⁸ and statutes prohibiting a marriage under an age specified, in the absence of an express declaration that it should be void, are commonly held directory merely, and the contract not void but voidable.⁴⁹

Marriages may in general be made between minors of sufficient age to enable them to contract when properly solemnized.⁵⁰

44. See 2 Kent Com. 79, notes, showing the periods fixed in different States as the age of consent. In the old States the common-law rule generally prevails. In Ohio, Indiana, and other Western States, the age of consent is raised to eighteen for males, and fourteen for females. See also Bennett v. Smith, 21 Barb. 439, as to the power of the New York courts to annul marriages with persons under age. A learned treatise on the age of consent in ancient and modern times will be found in 30 Harvard Law Review, 124.

There can be no common-law marriage by one under the age of consent fixed by statute,⁵¹ and a marriage by one below the age of consent with the consent of the parent may be valid.⁵²

§ 1123. Whether Void or Voidable.

A marriage of one under age is voidable only, and may be affirmed or disaffirmed on reaching majority,⁵³ unless the person was under seven years of age, when it is absolutely null.⁵⁴ Marriage within the age of consent seems therefore to be neither strictly void nor strictly voidable, but rather inchoate and imperfect;⁵⁵ Where one of the parties is under the age fixed by the statute, but is competent by the common law, the marriage is not void but merely voidable, and is valid until annulled.⁵⁶ ations of fraud and undue influence. In an Illinois case, a bill was brought on behalf of an infant to annul a marriage and declare the contract void. It appeared that the complainant was, at the time of the marriage, a school girl, about fifteen years old;⁵⁸ that the defendant, her father's coachman, while driving the children out, inveigled the complainant into the marriage; that he procured a marriage license through perjury, by swearing that the complainant was of age; and that she never consummated the marriage by cohabitation, but immediately repudiated it. The incongruity of such a match, the youth of the girl, the palpable abuse by a hired adult servant of the confidence reposed in him by the child's parents, and the minor's repudiation of the marriage before the nuptials had been consummated, were circumstances influential with the court. The case being a peculiar one, upon these facts rather than on principle, decree was entered, justly enough, declaring void the marriage.⁵⁹

Where, too, an infant under the age of assent, immediately after the ceremony with an adult, and before its consummation, has alleged ignorance and a dissent, a court of chancery has in New York interposed its protection and prohibited the adult from all intercourse and correspondence.⁶⁰⁻⁶¹

⁵⁸. The context shows that the girl was of an age where the consent of parents was required by statute, not, however, as an essential. She had progressed slightly beyond that period when infancy is a genuine impediment; so that the case was perhaps without precedent, and Walker, J., dissented from the judgment because of her legally sufficient age.

judicial sentence. When the age of consent is reached, no new ceremony is requisite to complete the marriage at the common law; but election to affirm will then be inferred from circumstances, such as continued intercourse, and even slight acts may suffice to show the intention of the parties. If they then choose to remain husband and wife, they are bound forever. Disaffirmance, on the other hand, may be either with or without a judicial sentence. So the infant on attaining age has a right to elect to affirm or disaffirm a marriage made while under age, but after making her election cannot change her decision.⁶² An action to annul a marriage may be brought on the ground of being under age.⁶³

§ 1126. Bigamous Marriage Void.

Polygamy, or bigamy as it is often termed — since the common law of England could scarcely conceive of such conjunctions carried beyond a double marriage — is discarded by all Christian communities. The fundamental doctrine of Christian marriage is that no length of separation can dissolve the union, so long as both parties are actually living, even though lapse of time should raise a reasonable supposition of death. But to render the second marriage void at law, the first should have been valid in all respects.⁶⁴

At common law, if either party to a marriage has a husband or wife living at the time of marriage the marriage is absolutely void,⁶⁵

ab initio,⁶⁶ and this rule applies to a marriage without ceremony as to one with ceremony,⁶⁷ and the one who remarries continues as the spouse of the first marriage notwithstanding the subsequent bigamous marriage.⁶⁸

A marriage ceremony properly performed does not disturb the polygamous relation of one already married to two women.⁶⁹

§ 1127. Bigamy a Crime.

It is a well established rule in civilized countries that marriage between parties, one of whom is bound by an existing marriage tie, is not only void, but subjects the offenders to criminal prosecution.⁷⁰ Polygamy remains an indictable offence. One of its less obvious evils — though not the least important when polygamy is regarded as a legalized institution in a free country — is that the patriarchal principle which it introduces is thoroughly hostile to free institutions; this fact was pointed out many years ago by one of our best writers on political ethics.⁷¹

In application of these broad principles, the welfare of the community has been regarded, and likewise the injury inflicted by a polygamous and void marriage upon the innocent party who is made the victim of deception. Prosecutions for bigamy have been sustained against a prisoner whose second marriage was within the prohibited degrees of affinity, or one who, unknown to his partner, assumes a false name in avoidance of proper ceremonials.⁷² In such indictments the rule that a marriage solemnized by a priest, under which the parties have cohabited as husband and wife, is prima facie a marriage everywhere, will apply.⁷³ § 1128. Effect of Belief in Death of Absent Spouse.

Nor is a new marriage entered into by one spouse in good faith, and in full but erroneous belief that the other spouse is dead, valid even after the lapse of the statutory absence; such parties are not free to marry again, but only relieved of the worst consequences,⁷⁴ although one party honestly believes the other to be free to marry.⁷⁵ Some of the harsher features of the old law have been softened in our own legislation; and statutes are not uncommon which possibly extend facilities for divorce from the old relation, and in any event protect the offspring of a new marriage contracted erroneously, but in good faith, by parties who had reason to believe a former spouse dead.⁷⁶ So, too, polygamy in fact is relieved of its penal consequences as concerns parties not the suit legitimate) the statement that it was contracted in good faith and with the full belief of the parties that the absent spouse was dead. Glass v. Glass, supra. guilty of polygamy in intention; but a certain period must elapse — usually seven years — before death can be presumed from one's mere continuous absence without being heard from. Such was one of the provisions in the English statute passed to make bigamy a civil offence, in the reign of James I,⁷⁷ which also exempted from punishment for bigamy persons re-married during the lifetime of the former spouse after a divorce, sentence of nullity, or disaffirmance on reaching age of consent. Similar statutes for the punishment of bigamy, with similar reservations, are enacted in this country; but in England and the United States some defects of the original legislation are now cured, and divorce from bed and board would not exempt an offender from prosecution.⁷⁸

The presumption of a legal marriage prevails after absence of the former spouse unheard of for the statutory period, although he had been absent unheard of for less than the statutory period at the time of the marriage, as the presumption of death from absence does not raise a presumption of death at any particular time.⁷⁹

A statute providing that the death of an absent spouse shall be presumed in case of his absence from the State unheard of for five years does not apply in a case where the husband was within the State during that time although the wife did not know of it.⁸⁰

do not apply to illicit cohabitation nor make marriage contracts not intended by the parties.⁸³ So statutes have been passed in many States designed to protect marriage entered into in good faith after the absence unheard of of the former spouse for a certain time,⁸⁴ but such acts do not protect the spouse who deserts the other in remarrying after the lapse of time during the life of the deserted spouse,⁸⁵ and where the second marriage takes place before the expiration of the statutory period it is invalid from the beginning.⁸⁶

Where a man married during the life of his wife undivorced, and the woman did not know of the existence of the first wife, and they lived together as man and wife until after the death of the first wife, the second wife thereupon became the legal wife and a child born after that time became legitimate. If a man and wife begin to cohabit not as man and wife, but as a meretricious cohabitation, their continued cohabitation will be presumed to continue on the same basis unless something is shown to the contrary.

But where a man and woman enter into a ceremonial marriage, thus openly declaring their intention to be husband and wife, and live together, the marriage may be void because of some impediment and the cohabitation may not be legal; but if the impediment is removed, and the matrimonial cohabitation continues, it is to be presumed that the intent to be husband and wife expressed in the ceremonial marriage continues unless the contrary appears, and the continued cohabitation after the removal of the impediment is to be considered as under such an intent and declaration rather than with an unlawful intent. At least a renewed consent might be inferred.⁸⁷

EFFECT OF PRIOR DIVORCE.

SECTION 1134. Effect of Divorce.

1135. Prohibition on Remarriage After Divorce.

1136. Void or Voidable.

§ 1134. Effect of Divorce.

A decree of divorce renders the party free to marry again,⁹⁷ but not where the second marriage takes place after the interlocutory decree and before the final decree,⁹⁸ or where the divorce decree was void for want of jurisdiction over the parties.⁹⁹ And a sham divorce, wrongfully procured and null, affords neither justification for a new marriage, nor defence to an indictment for bigamy.¹

The fact that one honestly but erroneously believed that she was legally divorced does not render the second marriage valid.²

§ 1135. Prohibition on Remarriage After Divorce.³

Under this same head may be considered a disqualification introduced into some parts of this country by legislative enactments; namely, the impediment which follows divorce. A divorce a vinculo should on general principles leave both parties free to marry again. But such is not always the case. Thus in Kentucky the person injured may not marry again before the expiration of two years from the decree of dissolution.⁵ And in several States the guilty party is prohibited from marrying again during the lifetime of the innocent spouse divorced — a provision of law seemingly more judicious to apply in terrorem by way of prevention than as a suitable method of punishment.⁶ In Scotland there is a peculiar, but not unreasonable, law which forbids the guilty party after divorce from marrying the particeps criminis; this was framed evidently to defeat collusive practices between persons desiring to put away an outstanding obstacle to their own union.⁷

Rules applicable to this special topic may be better understood when we come to investigate the law of divorce. The statutes themselves, however, have received very little authoritative exposition. Some of them, while providing for a grant of leave by the court to marry again, are enabling and not restrictive in character, and hence do not bind persons who are at liberty to marry without the judicial sanction.⁸ On the other hand, where one party in a case of divorce, being under the impediment of the statute, and within proper jurisdiction, marries again during the life of the other party, the new marriage is null; and if, after the impediment is removed by statutory lapse of time, leave of court to marry again, or the death of such other party, they who have thus erred enter into no new contract or ceremony of marriage, but continue cohabiting on the faith of the null marriage, their belief that it was legal will not render it so or shield them from the consequences.⁹

§ 1136. Void or Voidable.

Where one forbidden to remarry by a divorce decree for a certain period does remarry within the period the marriage is void, and cohabitation of the parties after expiration of the period is not effective to validate the marriage.¹⁰

All marriage contracts not so declared a nullity upon their face are voidable and subject to repudiation only upon the entry of a judicial decree of dissolution. A marriage is not absolutely void in any case not expressly so declared by law when by the subsequent conduct of the parties it may be ratified, confirmed or made valid by cohabitation.

So when divorced parties remarried within the time when such remarriage was prohibited the marriage was voidable only, and when one of the parties married another he is guilty of bigamy.¹¹ § 1137. Force, Fraud, and Error in General.

All marriages procured by force or fraud, or involving palpable error, are void; for here the element of mutual consent is wanting, so essential to every contract.¹³ The law treats a matrimonial union of this kind as absolutely void ab initio, and permits its validity to be questioned in any court; at the option, however, of the injured party, who may elect to abide by the consequences when left free to give or withhold assent. Force implies a physical constraint of the will; fraud, some deception practiced, whereby an unnatural state of the will is brought about.¹⁴

In most of the reported cases of force, fraud, and error, two or more of these elements are united; and frequently another distinct impediment appears, such as tender years on the part of the injured party; or, with regard to the offender, the suppression of material facts relative to some former marriage, or to his own mental or physical incapacity; or some other cause of nullity is shown by the evidence. In the reported cases, where the complainant was successful, some unprincipled man has generally sought to gain undue advantages from the person and fortunes of one whose feebleness will render her an easy prey; it rarely, if ever, appears that such force or fraud led to a reasonable and well-assorted match. Such unequal alliances need find favor from no tribunal.¹⁵ § 1138. Nature of Fraud.

As to fraud, in order to vitiate a marriage, it should go to the very essence of the contract. But what constitutes this essence? The marriage relation is not to be disturbed for trifles, nor can the cumbrous machinery of the courts be brought to bear upon impalpable things. The law, it has been well observed, makes no provision for the relief of a blind credulity, however it may have been produced.¹⁶ Fraudulent misrepresentations of one party as to birth, social position, fortune, good health, and temperament, cannot therefore vitiate the contract. Caveat emptor is the harsh but necessary maxim of the law. Love, however indispensable in an æsthetic sense, is by no means a legal essential to marriage; simply because it cannot be weighed in the scales of justice. So, too, all such matters are peculiarly within the knowledge of the parties themselves, and they are put upon reasonable inquiry.

A marriage induced by fraud may be void when the fraud goes to the essence,¹⁷ but a false statement as to an immaterial fact will not invalidate it.¹⁸ § 1139. Marriage Induced by Fraud Voidable.

Marriage induced by fraud is void only from the date when it is annulled by order of court.¹⁹ § 1140. Fraudulent Purpose Does Not Render Marriage Void.

A marriage is not void ab initio and subject to annulment at suit of the woman simply because it was entered into by the man with the fraudulent purpose of preventing the woman from testifying against him in bastardy proceedings²⁰ or seduction²¹ and of afterwards leaving her at once. Mere intention does not constitute enough, as there is here no misrepresentation as to a material fact. The marriage itself was legal although the purpose of the man in entering into it was fraudulent. He might have become of a better mind and have faithfully performed the duties of a husband, in which case there could have been no doubt of the

The law of marriage, in so far as property interests are concerned, is founded on business principles, in which the utmost good faith is required from all the parties, and the least fraud in connection therewith is the subject of judicial cognizance. Beach v. Beach, 160 Ia. 346, 141 N. W. 921; Leavitt v. Leavitt, 13 Mich. 452 (fraud operating to destroy intelligent consent at the time); Crane v. Crane, 62 N. J. validity of the marriage, however apparent his fraud might be at the moment of solemnizing it.

§ 1141. Failure to Fulfill Promise of Further Ceremony.

Fraud can consist only in the misrepresentation of an existing fact, and the failure to keep a promise as to the future cannot be a fraud sufficient to avoid a marriage. So where a man persuaded a woman to marry him by promising to have a civil ceremony and also a Jewish wedding, and he performed a civil marriage with her and refused to go through a Jewish wedding, this is not a misstatement of an existing fact on which annulment may be based. The court declines to allow a misrepresentation of present intention to stand as a misstatement of an existing fact.²² § 1142. Concealed Intention Not to Perform Marriage Duties.

The secret determination of a woman on contracting marriage to allow no marital relations with her husband, where such determination is persisted in constitutes such fraud as will justify an annulment of the marriage. The marital relations are the very essence of the marriage, and the consent of the husband to the marriage was thus obtained by fraudulent concealment of her intention not to carry out her part of the contract.²³

Where the woman goes through the marriage ceremony with an intention never to perform the duties of a wife and solely to secure a right to bear the name of a married woman, and in that way to hide the shame of having had an illegitimate child, intending to leave her husband at the church door and not see him again, which plan she carried into effect, the husband is entitled to an annulment of the marriage for fraud.²⁴

So a secret intention not to live with the plaintiff after marriage is such fraud as renders it voidable.²⁵ § 1143. Concealment of Past Unchastity.

Not even does the concealment of previous unchaste and immoral behavior in general vitiate a marriage; for although this seems to strike into the essence of the contract, yet public policy pronounces otherwise, and opens marriage as the gateway to repentance and virtue.²⁶

A marriage may be annulled for fraud even though fraud is made by statute a ground for divorce, and fraud exists where the woman conceals from the man the fact that her previous husband had obtained a divorce from her on the ground of adultery. It is settled law that the concealment by a woman of her previous unchastity is not sufficient to justify an annulment or a divorce, but this strict rule may be relaxed where the party deceived was young and inexperienced. So where a woman thirty years old persuades a youth of nineteen to marry her by concealing the fact that her former husband had obtained a divorce from her for her adultery, and this is a matter of public record, this is such fraud as to justify annulling the marriage.²⁷

But it seems to be now settled in some States that where a woman induces a man to marry her by falsely stating to him her previous virtue, the marriage may be annulled. This seems to be contrary to the spirit of the times, as the same rule is not applied to an immoral man, but the result may be justified on the theory that women are expected to be more moral than men and their unchastity is likely to lead to worse results.²⁸

§ 1144. Pregnancy Concealed or Misstated.

Whenever an innocent man marries a woman, supposing her, with reason, to be virtuous, and she conceals her pregnancy from him, the subsequent production of another man's child so unpleasantly complicates the marriage relation that he ought to be allowed his exit if he so desires, both in justice to himself and because the woman knew the risk she ran of bringing the parental relation to shame by marrying, and chose to incur it. In short, while marriage may be accepted by anyone whose past life has been dissolute, as the portal to a new and honest career, for which reason concealment of the past cannot legally be predicated of either party as an essential fraud, we apprehend that the woman who brings surreptitiously to the marriage bed the incumbrance of some outside illicit connection introduces a disqualification to the union as real as the physical impotence of a man would be, resulting from his own lasciviousness.

Thus it is held that where a woman, pregnant by another man at the time of the nuptials, bears a child soon after to an innocent husband, the marriage may be avoided by him; for she has thereby not only inflicted upon him, by deception, the grossest possible moral injury, but subjected them both to scandal and ill-repute.²⁹ The court, however, has taken heed not to press this exception far, refusing to allow one to shake off the obligations he has contracted with a woman whom he knew before marriage to be with child, and in fact had himself debauched, notwithstanding he married upon the faith of her previous assurances that her pregnancy was by him, and was undeceived by the time the child came into the world.³⁰ And, furthermore, if a man marries any woman whom

30. Foss v. Foss, 12 Allen, 26. It was here suggested by the court that he knows to be unchaste and pregnant, it is his own folly if he places implicit confidence in any of her statements.³¹

A young man is not entitled to have his marriage annulled for fraud when the woman persuaded him to marry her by falsely stating to him that she was pregnant by him when in fact she was pregnant by another man with whom she had intercourse about six weeks before she had relations with the plaintiff, when he was advised by his parents to wait and see whether the child was his, but he married the girl without heeding that advice. The fact that he had full knowledge of her unchastity should have put him on his guard and to take some steps to ascertain the truth of the charge made by her.³²

The plaintiff in an action of divorce for fraud, having had sexual intercourse with the defendant before marriage, was induced to marry her by her representations made to and believed by him, that she was with child as the result of such intercourse, whereas the fact was, as she knew, or ought to have known, that she was pregnant by another man. The first knowledge that he had of the truth came to him when she was delivered. Thereupon he ceased to have further relations with her, and brought this action praying for an annulment of the marriage or a divorce. He is clearly not entitled to an annulment.³³

The courts are practically agreed that antenuptial pregnancy by another man, if concealed by the wife from the husband, who was himself innocent of improper relations with her, is a fraud upon him, justifying a divorce or annulment of the marriage in the man might have taken medical or other advice before marriage, instead of relying upon the woman's word. In the former case a man would not have been expected to take such precautions.

this country,³⁴ although the opposite result is reached in England.³⁵

In this country, however, in most jurisdictions, illicit relations between the parties before marriage will bar the husband from a divorce on the ground of the wife's pregnancy by another man on the usual ground given that the plaintiff does not come into court with clean hands, and that he, knowing of her unchastity in her relations with him, was put upon her inquiry as to the confidence to be reposed in her word.³⁶ A recent leading case,³⁷ however, takes the view that where the man acted reasonably in believing her story, his act in marrying her was honorable, and that he does not enter the marriage contract in question with unclean hands, but in an effort to repair the wrong he thought he had done the woman, and where his act was induced by her fraudulent statement that she was pregnant by him, he is entitled to a divorce or to annulment as the practice in each State may require.

Where, however, the marriage is induced by false representations by the woman with whom the man has had intercourse that she is pregnant by him whereas in fact she is not pregnant at all he is clearly entitled to no relief. It is not ground for divorce that either party was unchaste before marriage, for as the court remarks, "If it were, many a wife is entitled to divorce."³⁸

§ 1146. Civil Action for Fraud Inducing Marriage.

One who by fraud and by concealing his marriage induces another to go through a marriage ceremony with him is liable to an action for the wrong done.⁴⁰

Where a woman defrauds a man by inducing him to convey to her his property before marrying her which he does within the prohibited period after his divorce the parties are in pari delicto and the court will not interfere to restore the property to the man although the woman did after the marriage immediately turn him out of the house which he gave her and has never performed the duties of a wife. As the parties were both engaged in an illegal transaction they are left without remedy against each other and the law will refuse to lend its aid to either of them but will leave them where it finds them to suffer the consequences of their illegal acts.⁴¹

A wife may bring an action for fraud against a third person who induced her to marry her husband by falsely representing to her that he was the owner of certain land which he did not own. The law of marriage in so far as property interests are concerned is founded on business principles in which the utmost good faith is required from all the parties and the least fraud in connection therewith is the subject of judicial cognizance.

The measure of damages is not, however, one-third the value of the land. The test is what is the present loss to the plaintiff by reason of the fact that her husband did not own the land and such as the evidence shows she was reasonably sure to lose in the future depending somewhat upon her expectancy of life and the expectancy of life of her husband, and the jury must find what amount will make good her loss, present and prospective.⁴² § 1147. Parties to Action to Avoid Marriage for Fraud.

Only the party and not his executors can take advantage of the fraud.⁴³ The issue, we may add, is between the offender and the injured party, and third persons have no right to interfere, although it be alleged that there was intent to defraud them in their own property interests.⁴⁴ In fact, marriage stands or falls by public permission with reference only to the marriage parties; and wherever they have legally assumed the relation as one agreeable to themselves, outsiders cannot meddle with the status from outside considerations. Where, too, a marriage has been effected through the fraudulent conspiracy of third persons, the rule is that, unless one of the contracting parties is cognizant of the fraud, the marriage is perfect; but, if cognizant, it is to be deemed the fraud of such party and treated accordingly.⁴⁵ § 1148. Ratification of Marriage Induced by Fraud.

A marriage procured by fraud or duress may be ratified.⁴⁶ All marriages of this sort are binding without further ceremony, provided the injured party sees fit to affirm it after all constraint is removed, or, in other words, to perfect the consent; but no such freedom of choice seems to be left to the offending party. Hence, this sort of marriage seems neither void nor voidable in the legal acceptance; but rather inchoate or incomplete until ratified, though void if the injured party choose so to treat it. Where consummation never followed the nuptials, the courts are the more readily disposed to set aside the match;⁴⁷ but in any event copu-lation, with knowledge of the fraud, and after removal of all constraint, is an effectual bar to relief.⁴⁸

A woman's fraudulent statements as to her virtue inducing marriage are not condoned by cohabitation where she continues her immoral conduct over her husband's objection.⁴⁹

§ 1149. Marriage Under Duress.

What amount of force is sufficient to invalidate a marriage is a question of circumstances. Evidently the same test could not apply to the mature and the immature, to the strong and the weak, to man and to woman. The general rule is that such amount of force as might naturally serve to overcome one's free volition and inspire terror will render the marriage null.⁵⁰ And where the party employing force sustains a superior relation of influence, or a post of confidence affording him opportunities which he chooses to abuse, this circumstance carries great weight. Thus in Harford v. Morris, where one of the guardians of a young and timid school-girl, having great influence and authority over her, took her to a foreign country, hurried her from place to place, and then married her without her free consent, the marriage was set aside;⁵¹ and similar consequences attended the marriage of a young school-girl to her father's coachman, who pursued his scheme while taking her out to ride.⁵² Duress may appear also in the marriage of a very young girl in a strange country where she was without friends or money⁵³ or where the person was mentally incapable of resisting improper pressure.⁵⁴

sonal violence is also not a ground for divorce where it does not appear that the plaintiff could not have had protection by causing the father to be bound over to keep the peace,⁵⁵ but duress may appear where the marriage was the result of a threat of the girl's father to kill the man if he did not.⁵⁶

A woman is not entitled to a divorce on account of a prior marriage entered into by the man on account of duress which marriage had been declared void by a decree of court, although the decree was after the date of the second marriage. In this case the man after the marriage into which he was forced left his wife and never lived with her. His subsequent assent would have made his voidable marriage valid; but as this was not given, it was void ab initio and imposed no obligation on him.⁵⁷ It seems that according to the weight of authority a marriage entered into under duress is voidable only and not void⁵⁸ though there is some authority that it is void ab initio.⁵⁹

§ 1150. Marriage Induced by Threat of Prosecution for Seduction.

So marriage by compulsion is procured when one under illegal arrest is forced to marry; and so probably, though the arrest was legal, if malicious circumstances are manifest.⁶⁰ But if a single man under legal arrest, by advice of the officer or magistrate, marries the woman whom he has seduced or got with bastard offspring, in order to escape prosecution, the law will favor a presumption of honest repentance on his part, and hold him bound,⁶¹ substantial justice being thereby done to the utmost, and the lesser scandal to society permitted in order to avert the greater.

A man is sometimes forced into a marriage which ought to be annulled. See Bassett v. Bassett, 9 Bush, 696. In Willard v. Willard, 6 Baxter, 297, before testimony was taken, an allegation of duress was sustained against demurrer. Here the man claimed that the woman's brother seized him on the highway, and forced him to marry her, and that as soon as the duress was over he escaped; also that the woman had a child three months afterwards. Duress was claimed by the husband in Vroom v. Marsh, 29 N. J.

A marriage will not be held to be under duress where the man marries to escape criminal prosecution for seduction of the girl,⁶² and a marriage is not under duress simply because it is made under the provisions of a statute permitting one to escape prosecution for seduction by marrying his victim.⁶³

The fact that the father of a woman with whom the plaintiff had had intercourse and who claimed to be pregnant by him threatened the plaintiff with criminal prosecution if he did not marry her is not a reason for divorce when it appears that she is not pregnant as if he were not guilty of the charge it would not have hurt him and a proceeding for bastardy is civil and not criminal in that jurisdiction.⁶⁴

§ 1151. Error in Individual.

As to error, it may be said, as in fraud, that the error should reach the essentials; and Chancellor Kent justly observes that it would be difficult to find a case where simple error, without some other element, would be permitted to vacate a marriage. There is an English case in point where a man courted and afterwards married a young lady, believing her to be a certain rich widow, Eq. 15, but the court allowed alimony pendente lite to the wife, she denying the charge.

whom he had known only by reputation.⁶⁵ She and her friends had countenanced the deception. It was held, nevertheless, that the marriage must stand.⁶⁶ But the palpable substitution of some other individual for the person actually accepted and intended for marriage may properly be repudiated by the victim to the fraud.⁶⁷ And some cases have gone even farther, as where a scoundrel palms himself off as a certain individual of good repute.⁶⁸

Error as to the chastity of a wife is not a "mistake in the person" within the terms of a statute allowing annulment of a marriage for that reason.⁶⁹

§ 1152. Sham Marriage.

The element of imperfect consent is readily associated with cases of the present class. Thus, if a person is unwittingly entrapped into a marriage ceremony, not meaning nor affording reason for the other party to believe that it should be binding, this marriage may be repudiated.⁷⁰ And in general a mock marriage in jest is no marriage.⁷¹

One is not guilty of rape who by a sham marriage induces a woman to live with him as his wife, as no force is used, and consent is obtained, and a statute declaring that rape occurs when a woman is induced to consent to sexual intercourse by a trick of one causing her to believe that he is her husband does not apply to such a case, but is directed to a deceit as to the identity of the man with whom she is induced to cohabit.⁷²

§ 1153. Annulment Distinguished from Divorce.

Proceedings for annulling a marriage have one obvious distinction from actions for divorce in that the latter is predicated on a valid marriage while an action for annulment presupposes that the marriage is void or voidable. The latter is based on facts existing at the time of the marriage, while an action for divorce is necessarily based on matters occurring since marriage.⁷³

But neither legislators nor the courts in these times adhere to so strict a distinction. Impotence, for instance, is frequently classified among the grounds for divorce; while proceedings for nullity are quite similar in most respects to those for divorce; and hence the decree of nullity may sometimes be found stated as a third kind of divorce in addition to those specified in the preceding paragraph.

⁷³. Millar v. Millar (Cal.), 167 P. 394; Henderson v. Bessor, 265 Mo. 718, 178 S. W. 175.

A decree of nullity has long been available in practice, in cases which touch the root of the marriage consummation, as where there was mental or physical incapacity, fraud, force, or error, non-age, consanguinity or affinity, a former spouse living, or other fundamental impediment to the union. Now, though all these are to be distinguished in strict sense from causes of divorce, historically and on a a priori reason, inasmuch as they impeach the marriage itself ab initio, our present divorce statutes incline to give the term "divorce" the widest possible scope; and taking into view, moreover, the imperfect matrimonial jurisdiction which American courts may profess to exercise upon ecclesiastical analogies, our legislators frequently specify causes of nullity as in reality causes of divorce, making the same course of procedure substantially for matters inherent to the contract of marriage and those consequent upon the marriage state. Hence, in common parlance, divorce is sought as to one or more of the impediments above mentioned; some of our local divorce statutes, however, making express distinction so that nullity shall be the sentence in the one case and divorce in the other.⁷⁵

Such statute provisions do not often extend the cause of divorce beyond that to which the doctrine of nullity properly applies. And even while pronouncing certain marriages void on such grounds, independently of a decree of divorce, courts yet prefer that the decree be rendered so as to conduce to good order and decorum and the benefit of the public.

§ 1154. Jurisdiction for Annulment.

The question of jurisdiction for annulment is confused by the very real confusion in our decisions between divorce and annulment. There is a clear distinction between them, and their

75. Browne's Digest of Divorces, Part I., shows that impotence or physical incapacity is a specified cause of divorce in nearly all of the States; bigamy in very many; fraud and force in very many; mental incapacity in many; non-age in many; consanguinity and affinity in many.

effects. Divorce expressly or impliedly sustains the validity of the marriage. One of the steps in obtaining a divorce is to prove a valid marriage. Annulment on the other hand proceeds on the theory that no marriage ever existed. Jurisdiction in divorce depends on domicile, but it seems that a suit for annulment of the res of the marriage should be brought where the res was created, that is, in the State where the marriage was celebrated, and there is some authority for this, which we submit is the correct view.⁷⁶ The great weight of authority, however, seems to put jurisdiction for annulment on the basis of domicile⁷⁷ largely as a result of statutory confusion between the two and partly on account of the failure of the courts to distinguish between them.⁷⁸

§ 1155. What Law Governs Annulment.

There is much confusion in the cases as to jurisdiction for annulment, which confusion arises largely on account of the failure of many courts to observe the distinction between divorce and annulment. Divorce is based on a valid marriage, while annulment is based on the claim that there never was a marriage. Divorce is based on things happening after the marriage, while annulment is based on the ceremony itself. It is well settled that a marriage valid where made is valid everywhere, and therefore it is thought by some courts that only the jurisdiction where the marriage is celebrated should have power to annul it. This view is logical and seems correct on theory, and has some well-considered

ered decisions in line with it,⁷⁹ but probably in most States the distinction between divorce and annulment is lost sight of, and it is usually said that jurisdiction for annulment depends on the domicile of the parties just like divorce.⁸⁰

In England the rule seems to be that both the court where the marriage was celebrated⁸¹ and the court where the respondent is domiciled⁸² have jurisdiction to annul it. The English courts, however, with seeming inconsistency, will not recognize a foreign decree of annulment by a jurisdiction where the parties are domiciled when the marriage took place in England.⁸³

§ 1156. Statutes Governing.

Actions for annulment are commonly provided for by statute in this country,⁸⁴ and where so provided for the statutory process must be followed⁸⁵ with appropriate process, petition and other § 1157. Grounds for Annulment in General.

Where annulment of a marriage is covered by statute the court can act only on grounds prescribed in the statute, except for lunacy and fraud,⁸⁸ but the fact that the statute enumerates certain grounds for annulment of a marriage may not imply that no others exist,⁸⁹ and considerations of public policy and the welfare of the children should be considered.⁹⁰

it legal,¹² and the question whether a marriage can be sustained may depend on whether it was entered into in good faith.¹³

Estoppel may arise by a statement by the parties to the public authorities that they are married,¹⁴ and one may be estopped to claim rights as widow of a deceased person where she is at the time of his death living with another.¹⁵

There can be no estoppel where the marriage is absolutely void,¹⁶ and the rule of pari delictu will not be applied to prevent relief in a suit to annul and set aside a void marriage, as that is a matter in which the State is an interested party.¹⁷

There is a growing feeling that the doctrine of pari delictu should not be applied to actions for nullity of marriage on the ground that the State is interested in the question, that the decree of annulment would establish the status of the parties beyond any doubt and also the status of any future wife and children in case the defendant should remarry. So a marriage may be annulled under this doctrine even though both parties knew at the time it was contracted that one of them had a spouse living or that the marriage was otherwise defective.¹⁸ § 1163. Plaintiff's Fault as Defence.

The petition for annulment will not be barred by the fault of the plaintiff as the State is interested.¹⁹ in theory on the existence of a valid marriage creating in the husband duties of support.²⁴ If the husband brings the action and the wife claims that the marriage is valid, alimony and counsel fees may be allowed on the theory that the marriage will be considered valid until pronounced otherwise.²⁵ But if the wife brings the action the majority of the courts take the view that she is estopped to claim alimony or counsel fees, as she by her action is claiming that the marriage is void.²⁶

On either theory it seems clear that the duty to pay alimony ceases on death of the husband, and therefore where an action for nullity is brought after his death by his relatives no allowance should be made.²⁷ So where a parent seeks annulment of the divorce of his infant living son no alimony should be allowed, as the parent is a stranger so far as alimony is concerned.²⁸

The power of the court to award alimony and counsel fees in actions for nullity depends on local statute. The power of the court to award alimony in divorce actions does not give it power to do the same in actions for nullity,²⁹ though in some decisions it has been held that the power to award alimony is incidental to the power to annul,³⁰ while in some States the power to award § 1169. Words of Present Consent, or of Future Consent, etc.

To constitute a marriage, then, where there are no civil requirements — or, in other words, to constitute an informal marriage — words clearly expressing mutual consent are sufficient without other solemnities. Two forms of consent are mentioned in the books: the one, consent per verba de præsentî, with or without consummation; the other, consent per verba de futuro, followed by consummation.³⁷ Some writers have added a third form of consent — by habit and repute; but this is, very clearly, nothing more than evidence of consummated marriage amounting to a presumption conclusive enough for the purpose at hand.³⁸ So, too, there is reason to suppose that the marriage per verba de futuro is of the same sort as the former; marriage per verba de præsenti constituting the only real marriage promise, while consummation following de futuro words of promise raises a legal presumption, not probably conclusive, that words de præsenti afterwards passed between the parties. The copula is no part of the marriage; it only serves to some extent as evidence of marriage.³⁹ Consensus, non concubitus, is the maxim of the civil, ecclesiastical, and common law alike.⁴⁰

Informal celebration constitutes marriage as known to natural and public law. The English canon law as it stood previous to the Council of Trent, the law of Scotland, the law of some of the United States, and perhaps the common law of England, all dispense with the ceremonial observances of formal marriage.⁴¹

In this country a common-law marriage may appear in either of two ways, either by a present agreement of marriage,⁴² even in the absence of witnesses,⁴³ or by an agreement to marry in the future followed by cohabitation.⁴⁴⁻⁴⁵ § 1170. Form of Agreement.

38. Lord Selborne, in the recent case of De Thoren v. Attorney-General, 1 H. L. App. 686, confirms this view. See also Breadalbane's Case, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 182.

Words of present promise, in order to constitute an informal marriage, must contemplate a present, not a future, assumption of the status. And herein lies a difficulty: that of discriminating between actual marriage and what we now commonly term an engagement. If the agreement be by words of present promise — as if the parties should say, “We agree to be henceforth man and wife” — the marriage is perfect. The form of expression is not material. The contract may be expressed in any form of words,⁴⁶ or may be implied,⁴⁷ and marriages have been upheld by joint

A mutual agreement entered into in good faith between competent parties to contract the relation of husband and wife, followed by cohabitation as such, constitutes a valid marriage, even if the agreement was not made in the presence of witnesses. Umbenhour v. Umbenhour, 31 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 317.

44-45. In re Maher's Estate, 204 Ill. 25, 68 N. E. 159.

An existing agreement to marry at a future day conclusively negatives the claim of a marriage per verba de praesenti. Sorensen v. Sorensen, 68 Neb. 483, 100 N. W. 930, 103 N. W. 455; Bargna v. Bargna (Tex. Civ. App. 1910), 127 S. W. 1156.

46. The contract requisite to the creation of the marriage relation need not be expressed in any special manner, or by any prescribed form of words, but may be sufficiently evidenced by any clear and unambiguous language or conduct. Reynoldson v. Reynoldson, 96 Neb. 270, 147 N. W. 844.

declaration without further ceremony.⁴⁸ And Swinburne says that though the words should not of themselves conclude matrimony, yet the marriage would be good if it appeared that such was the intent.⁴⁹ The proposal of one must be actually accepted by the other; yet such acceptance may be indicated by acts, such as a nod or courtesy. The mutual consent may be expressed orally or in writing.⁵⁰ Written promises are of course unnecessary; though the reported cases show frequently letters or other writings interchanged, from which the intent was gathered. And in the celebrated Scotch case of Dalrymple v. Dalrymple a marriage promise was established from the successive united acknowledgments of the parties as man and wife, the writings having been preserved by the lady and produced by her at the trial. In this case the principle was sustained, that words importing secrecy or alluding to some future act or public acknowledgment, when superadded to words of present promise, do not invalidate the agreement.⁵¹

§ 1171. Mutual Consent Required.

It is to be premised, however, by way of enlarging upon the idea of perfect and imperfect consent suggested under the last head, that some form of marriage promise, some ceremony, however slight, has always been deemed essential to the validity of marriage. The common language of the books is, that, in the absence of civil regulations to the contrary, marriage is a contract, and nothing but mutual consent is required. And the old maxim of the Roman law is quoted to support this view: Nuptias non concubitus, sed consensus facit.⁵² But is there not an ambiguity in the use of such language? For it is material to ask whether consensus or consent is used in the sense of simple volition or an expression of volition. We maintain that the latter is the correct legal view; and that it should be said that the law requires in such cases a simple expression of mutual consent, and no more. For the very definition of marriage implies that there should be not only the consenting mind, but an expression of the consenting mind, by words or signs, which expression in proper form constitutes in fact the marriage agreement. It is in this sense that we shall apply the terms formal and informal to marriage in the following sections.

§ 1172. Conditional Agreement.

More uncertainty arises in matrimonial contracts where a condition inconsistent with marriage is superadded; as if parties should agree to live together as man and wife for ten years; but bona fide intent may be fairly presumed where there are no special circumstances to throw light upon the conduct of the parties,⁵³ but a limited agreement is insufficient.⁵⁴

§ 1173. Matrimonial Intent Necessary.

Informal marriage is to be sustained on the theory that an institution of such fundamental importance to our race ought to be good, independently of, and prior to, the formal requirements which human government imposes at an advanced stage of society. But, as we shall see, the marriage acts now in force in England and many of the United States render certain solemnities, religious or secular, indispensable. Most of the continuous decisions relating to informal marriages are therefore to be found in the Scotch reports, where the general doctrine has been pretty fully discussed. And the great, the almost insuperable, difficulty which presents itself at the outset in such cases is thus clearly indicated by Lord Stowell in Lindo v. Belisario: "A marriage is not every carnal commerce; nor would it be so even in the law of nature. A mere carnal commerce, without the intention of cohabitation and bringing up of children, would not constitute marriage under any supposition. But when two persons agree to have that commerce for the procreation and bringing up of children, and for such lasting cohabitation — that, in a state of nature, would be a marriage; and, in the absence of all civil and religious institutions, might safely be presumed to be, as it is properly called, a marriage in the sight of God." ⁵⁵ Did parties therefore coming thus together mean fornication or did they mean marriage?

Here it is seen that there should not only be words of promise, but that they should be uttered with matrimonial intent. To ascertain the purpose of the parties in each case, the courts will look at all the circumstances, and even admit parol evidence to contradict the terms of a written contract; in this respect modifying the ordinary rules of evidence. For writings of matrimonial acknowledgment may have been interchanged as a blind or cover for some scheme well understood between the parties.⁵⁶ If, too, a woman, in surrendering her person to a man, is conscious that she is committing an act of fornication instead of consummating such a marriage, the copula cannot, for her sake, be connected with any previous words of promise so as to constitute a marriage.⁵⁷

Disbelief in ceremonials, or conscientious scruples, may be alleged in support of an informal marriage, by way of preference, where such latter marriage is held lawful, and the parties mutually contracted with the view of a lawful union.⁵⁸

A present promise followed by cohabitation will effect a common-law marriage regardless of what the parties consider the legal effect of their acts to be.⁵⁹

§ 1174. Per Verba de Praesenti.

It is a curious thing that after many American courts had been committed to the view of the common law that a marriage per verba de praesenti is valid, the highest court of England in the year 1844 decided against the existence of any such rule in that country.⁶⁰

Where the statute law declares marriage a civil contract, although the duties and obligations arising from such contract and the status thereby created are fixed by law, there are many precedents for the rule that in the absence of statute expressly declaring such marriage invalid an informal contract of marriage, one made between competent parties without the legal ceremonies, and in the absence of the clergyman or civil officer, is, when consummated by cohabitation, valid and binding upon the parties.⁶¹

An interesting Scotch case illustrates the painful uncertainty which hangs about these informal marriages. A baronet of forty, and a bachelor, whose dissolute habits were notorious, had somewhat intimate relations with the family of a man who made fish-tackles. Entertained at the latter's house, on a birthday occasion, with a champagne supper, after which allusion was made by the host to the bad name he was getting with having the baronet so much among his daughters, the titled guest offered to shut people's mouths; he was poor and could not marry now, he said, but would marry after Scotch fashion. Then, kneeling before one of the daughters, a damsel of sixteen, he took a ring from his pocket, placed it upon her third finger, and said to her, "Maggie, you are my wife before Heaven, so help me, O God!" and the two kissed each other. The daughter said, "Oh, Major!" and put her arms around his neck. The baronet and the daughter were then "bedded" according to the old Scotch fashion. They lived together for some weeks after this celebration, and met at various times, but there appears to have been no continuous cohabitation. In about thirteen months Maggie had a boy, whom she registered as illegitimate; and some eighteen months later still, the baronet died. The parties to this hasty and apparently unpremeditated union had not, meantime, represented themselves as husband and wife; and as for the baronet, he denied to others that such relation existed, until, when lying at the point of death in delirium tremens, he seemed doubtfully to admit it. Now, here was an informal marriage, with words of suitable import, solemn and precise, followed by consummation. Supposing this ceremony to have been with marriage intention, there was no reason for disputing its validity; nor, indeed, on the girl's behalf, provided she took all in seriousness, even though the baronet himself jested. To be sure, he might have been maudlin at the moment, on which point, however, the case did not turn. The British House of Lords reversed the decision of the Scotch Court of Sessions, mainly upon circumstantial proof that both parties, by behavior subsequent to the ceremony, repudiated its force, and that neither, in fact, had been in earnest. The present issue involved the inheritance of the baronet's estate at some lapse from his death. Both parents of the girl were now dead; the baronet had begotten illegitimate offspring during his life elsewhere; and instead of asserting upon his death, as she might, that this boy was his lawful child, Maggie had at first claimed only a bastard's support for him.⁶² § 1175. Per Verba de Futuro.

Marriage by words of future promise is consummated when two persons agree to marry at some future period and afterwards actually do cohabit. The foundation of this doctrine is the presumption that the parties meant right rather than wrong, and hence that copulation was permitted on the faith of the marriage promise. But in this class of cases it is requisite that the promise de futuro should be absolute and mutual and in good faith. Mere courtship does not suffice, though followed by carnal intercourse,⁶³ and an agreement to live together as husband and wife is not sufficient unless acted upon by cohabitation.⁶⁴ Nor in general do words of promise with immoral conditions annexed. It is admitted that no familiarities short of the copula will convert such loose espousals into matrimony.⁶⁵ It is not clear whether cohabitation after verba de futuro raises ever a conclusive presumption of marriage at law or not: unquestionably the more reasonable doctrine, however, is that it does not, and that the intent of the parties may be shown as in other cases.⁶⁶ But innocence will be inferred, if possible, rather than guilt.⁶⁷ In New York this doctrine of marriage by words de futuro is utterly repudiated, and in other States it is maintained quite broadly that all informal marriages were unknown to the English common law.⁶⁸ This last has been long a mooted point in the courts, and will ever remain so; but whatever may have been the historical fact, certain it is that the necessity for a more formal observance of marriage has been almost universally recognized; and the very words, "marriage in the sight of God," so familiar to the readers of the Scotch matrimonial law, not only import the peculiar embarrassments which attend the justification of such loosely contracted alliances before the world, but attest the solemn character of this institution.⁶⁹

§ 1176. Intercourse After Betrothal.

Hence, we may observe, generally, that a betrothal followed by copulation does not make this informal marriage a legal one, when the parties looked forward to a formal marriage ceremony, and did not agree to become husband and wife without it;⁷⁰ and the promise does not constitute a marriage. See, too, Morrison v. Dobeon, 8 Scotch Sess. 347.

mere fact that parties were living together and intended some time to marry is not enough to show a common-law marriage.⁷¹

§ 1177. Public Cohabitation Necessary.

There is much conflict in the decisions whether public cohabitation is essential in this country for a common-law marriage, but it seems to be the general view that to constitute a marriage per verba de præsenti cohabitation subsequently is necessary, just the same as in case of a marriage per verba de futuro.⁷²

Marriage is more than a contract: it is a status created by mutual consent of one man and one woman. The only difference between a formal marriage under license and a common-law marriage is in the method of expressing consent. The cohabitation must be professedly as husband and wife, and public, so that by their conduct towards each other they may be known as husband and wife. To allow a private agreement to operate as a common-law marriage would open the door to fraud of all kinds and make the estates of wealthy men the prey of the adventuress.

So where a man and woman in her room in a house which she kept as a house of assignation agreed to be husband and wife, and had intercourse together, there is no marriage where they never lived together publicly as man and wife, and she never took his name till after his death and continued in the same business as before.⁷³

be followed by the parties holding themselves out as husband and wife, or that it be acted on by the parties living together openly as husband and wife.⁷⁵ § 1178. Character of Cohabitation.

No fixed or continuous period of time of cohabitation is necessary to constitute a common-law marriage,⁷⁶ but cohabitation for a short time induced by fraud without actual holding out to the community is not enough.⁷⁷

On the issue of the existence of a common-law marriage the character of cohabitation between the man and woman is material, and the evidence which tended to show the character of the community in which she lived and her own character for virtue were relevant to interpret the visits of the man and his association with the woman.⁷⁸ § 1179. Cohabitation After Removal of Impediment.

Where the parties in the beginning intend and desire a valid marriage, but an impediment exists and they continue in the relation of husband and wife after the removal of the impediment, this continuation may be upheld as a common-law marriage.⁷⁹ So it has been said that where a legal impediment exists to a mar-

§ 1180. Who May Make.

One already married cannot make a valid common-law marriage.⁸¹

§ 1181. Relations Illicit in Inception.

A union once originating between man and woman, purely illicit in its character, and voluntarily so, there must appear some formal and explicit agreement between the parties thereto, or a marriage ceremony, or some open and visible change in their habits and relations, pointing to honest intentions, before their alliance can be regarded as converted into either a formal or an informal marriage,⁸² as although the relations between them were illicit in the beginning still a common-law marriage may later occur between them.⁸³

So a common-law marriage may be sustained notwithstanding previous illicit relations between the parties where the parties agree to live together as man and wife and live together as such for seven years and are known to their friends and neighbors as married during that period. The mere fact that the previous relations between the parties were illicit does not prevent a common-law marriage, as it cannot be contended that a man and woman living together in illicit relations cannot subsequently on this point. It is stated in Breadalbane's Case, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 182, that a connection beginning as adulterous may, on ceasing to be so, become matrimonial by consent and evidenced by habit and repute, without a public act.

marry. In the face of long-continued cohabitation as man and wife the presumption of the continuance of an illicit relation gives way to a superior presumption of compliance with the law.⁸⁴

Nor is the issue between informal marriage and illicit intercourse to be concluded by the conduct of the pair towards society. They may, for convenience or decency's sake, hold themselves out to third persons as man and wife, while yet sustaining at law, and intentionally, a purely meretricious relation.⁸⁵

And yet a proper regard for the real intention of the cohabiting pair encourages often the presumption of innocence and good faith, even where the relation assumed was an illegal one. Supposing two persons to have made an informal marriage, in the mistaken belief that the former spouse of one of them was already dead, or that some sentence of divorce left them, in like manner, free to unite. This case should be distinguished from that of some original understanding for a mere carnal commerce. And if the impediment becomes removed in the course of their cohabitation under such circumstances, and the pair live continuously together as man and wife, no new ceremony, agreement, or visible change in their relation would probably be deemed requisite to establish matrimonial consent subsequent to the removal of the impediment; for here the original intention continues, but in the case of carnal commerce necessarily changes, in order that an honest relation may be presumed.⁸⁶

§ 1184. Effect of Statutes Requiring Ceremony.

Out of consideration for what may be termed the public, or natural and theoretical law of marriage, many American courts have, to a very liberal extent and beyond all stress of necessity, upheld the informal marriage against even legislative provisions for a formal cerebation. Marriage being a matter of common right, it is held by the highest tribunal for harmonizing the rule of States, that, unless the local statute which prescribes regulations for the formal marriage ceremony positively directs that marriages not complying with its provisions shall be deemed void, the informal marriage by words of present promise must be pronounced valid, notwithstanding statutory directions have been disregarded.⁹¹

At common law a marriage was valid made merely by consent of the parties cohabiting together as husband and wife, and such marriages are still good in this country unless expressly declared void by statute. Statutes providing simply what ceremony shall be used and what officers shall solemnize a marriage are directory merely and do not render void a common-law marriage.⁹²

So statutes requiring a marriage license before a marriage may be entered into, and defining marriage as a civil contract, are directory merely, and do not invalidate a marriage entered into without these formalities. The common-law marriage entered into in good faith will be upheld except where the statute expressly makes it void.⁹³ So statutory requirements as to marriage may be held directory so as to leave common-law marriages valid,⁹⁴ and such marriage will be upheld although the parties do not comply with a statute requiring certain formality where the statute only makes failure to comply with it a crime.⁹⁵

Where the parties went before a justice of the peace, who held a marriage ceremony in the usual form, but he was not qualified to celebrate a marriage, the marriage was void as a statutory marriage, and was also void as a common-law marriage, as there was no cohabitation after the ceremony, although the parties had had intercourse with each other before that time and there was subsequently a child born.⁹⁸

On the question of the existence of a common-law marriage the woman cannot testify that she married the man, as this is a conclusion,⁹⁹ but the subsequent conduct of the parties may be inquired into to ascertain what the contract was.¹

§ 1188. Presumptions; Mental Reservations.

In cases of doubt, the rule is to sustain the marriage as lawful and binding. If there has been continued intercourse between the parties, this presumption becomes of course still stronger. And if promises were exchanged while one acted in good faith and in earnest, the other is not permitted to plead a mental reservation.²

FORMAL CELEBRATION.

§ 1189. English Law Requiring Ceremony.

All the learning of informal marriages, if there was ever much of it, was swept out of the English courts when formal religious celebration was prescribed by positive statute. Ceremonials had long been required by those canons upon which the ecclesiastical law was based. Lord Hardwicke's Act, passed in the reign of George II.,³ is the most famous of these statutes. This act required all marriages to be solemnized in due form in a parish church or public chapel, with previous publication of the banns; and marriages not so solemnized were pronounced void, unless dispensation should be granted by special license. Some harsh provisions of this act were relaxed in the reign of George IV., but soon re-enacted.⁴ More recent legislation permits of a civil ceremonial before a register, to satisfy such as may have conscientious scruples against marriage in church.⁵ Such, too, is the general tenor of legislation in this country; the law justly regarding civil observances and public registration sufficient for its own purposes, while human nature clings to the religious ceremonial.⁶

Either celebration before a clergyman or with the participation of some one of such civil officers as the statute may designate is therefore at the option of parties choosing at the present day to marry. This is the law of England and America. And the only controversies ever likely to occur in our courts would be where the language of the statutes in some particular State left it doubtful whether marriages celebrated informally were to be considered absolutely null. It is to be borne in mind that Lord Hardwicke's Act is of too recent a date to be considered as part of our common law. Was, then, marriage in facie ecclesiæ essential in England before the passage of this act? It is admitted that the religious marriage celebration was customary previous to the Reformation. It is further allowed that the church, centuries ago, created an impediment, now obsolete, called "precontract," the effect of which was that parties engaged to be married were bound by an indissoluble tie, so that either one could compel the other to submit at any time to the ceremonial marriage. But whether precontract rendered children legitimate, and carried dower, curtesy, and the other incidents of a valid marriage, is not clear. In 1844 the question, whether at the common law a marriage without religious ceremony was valid, went to the English House of Lords, and resulted in an equal division.⁷ And, curiously enough, such was the fate of a similar case in this country before the highest tribunal in the land.⁸ So that we may fairly consider the law on this point as forever unsettled.⁹

9. See full discussion of this question, with authorities, in note to 2 Kent Com. 87; Cheney v. Arnold, 15 N. Y. 345. The American doctrine is, that the intervention of one in holy orders was not essential at common law. This is the view of Chancellor Kent, Judge Reeve, and Professor Greenleaf, as expressed in their respective text-books; also the general current of American decisions. Mr. Bishop confirms these conclusions while suggesting new reasons for such an American doctrine; as, for instance, that in these colonies the attendance of one in holy orders, and more especially of an ordained clergy-

Among most nations and in all ages has the celebration of marriage been attended with peculiar forms and ceremonies, which have partaken more or less of the religious character. Even the most barbarous tribes so treat it where they hold to the institution at all. The Greeks offered up a solemn sacrifice, and the bride was led in great pomp to her new home. In Rome, similar customs prevailed down to the time of Tiberius. Marriage, it is true, degenerated afterwards into a mere civil contract of the loosest description; parties being permitted to cohabit and separate with almost equal freedom.¹⁰ The early Christians, there is reason to suppose, treated marriage as a civil contract; yielding, perhaps, to the prevailing Roman law. Yet the teachings of the New Testament and church discipline gave peculiar solemnity to the relation. And religious observances must have prevailed at an early date, for in process of time marriage became a sacrament. In England, centuries later, it needed only Lord Hardwicke's Act to apply statute law to a universal practice; for although, in the time of Cromwell, justices of the peace were permitted to perform the ceremony, popular usage by no means sanctioned the change. Informal marriages are uncommon even in Scotland, where the civil law prevails. In our own country it is not surprising that local jurisprudence should have exhibited some signs of reaction against ancient canon and kingly ordinance. Yet, even with us, the almost universal custom repudiates informal and civil observances; and, secured in the privilege of choosing prosaic and business-like methods of procedure, Christian America yields its testimony in favor of marriage in facie ecclesiæ.¹¹ man of the established church, could not always be readily procured. See 1 Bish. Mar. & Div., 5th ed., §§ 279-282, and decisions collated; 2 Kent Com. 87; Reeve Dom. Rel. 195 et seq.; 2 Greenl. Ev., § 460.

But in several States the contrary is declared to be the common law. 1 Bish. & Div. And statutory forms are declared requisite, and the doctrines of informal marriage denied more or less emphatically, as the foregoing pages have shown. Supra, § 1183, note.

The customs of particular religious sects may be used in celebrating marriage¹² but not to sanction bigamy¹³ and there need not be a religious ceremony at all.¹⁴ § 1191. Statutes Prescribing Forms Directory Only.

Statutes prescribing the forms of marriage are directory and a failure to comply with them does not render the marriage void unless the statute expressly so provides.¹⁵ The main purpose of enforcing upon civilized and populous communities marriage rites appropriate to so solemn an institution being surely desirable, it will be readily conceded that English and American tribunals tend, in construing the marriage acts, to uphold every marriage, if possible, notwithstanding a non-compliance with the literal forms. And this is right; for while formal celebration is a shield to honest spouses and their posterity, rigor in the details of form, especially in inconvenient or trivial details, or those which it is incumbent rather upon third persons to respect, exposes them to new dangers. Thus, in construction of the English mandatory act, marriage celebrated by a clergyman in temporary quarters while the church was undergoing repairs is presumed to have been celebrated in a place duly licensed.¹⁶ riage is a sacrament, or that religious ceremonies are essential to its due observance. We are speaking only of the universal testimony as to the fitness of peculiar and in general religious observances. Judge Reeve, exhibiting his contempt for "Popish" practices, says: "There is nothing in the nature of a marriage contract that is more sacred than that of other contracts, that requires the interposition of a person in holy orders, or that it should be solemnized in church." Reeve Dom. Rel. 196. At the time he wrote, was not the practice prevailing in New England contrary to his theory, as it was before and as it remains still? And who has ever proposed in modern times to perform a business contract in church?

§ 1192. Form of Assent.

We may assume, on general principle, that a mutual assent to marry in the presence of such third person is essential to the formal ceremony, and that if such assent is refused by either party, or waived or omitted altogether, there is no valid ceremony of marriage; while, as to the form, by words or acts, expressive of the marriage consent of the pair, this is discretionary, and no set formality or ritual is needful.¹⁷

§ 1193. Mental Reservation.

No secret reservation of one of the parties can affect the validity of a proper marriage ceremony.¹⁸ § 1194. Presence of Third Person Necessary.

On the other hand, our ceremonial statutes of marriage, which require fulfilment at all, must, in fundamental respects, at all events, be complied with. Thus, the essence of formal marriage seems to consist in the performance of the ceremony by or in the presence of a responsible third person. And hence, unless parties can take refuge in natural law and an informal marriage, they are not permitted to tie their own knot. Consistently with this view, and quite rationally, it has been insisted in Massachusetts that husband and wife cannot be permitted to solemnize their own marriage. And quite recently in that State, where a ceremony was performed solely by the man and woman, no third person taking part, no magistrate or minister being present, and neither party claiming to hold the tenets of Friends or Quakers, it was held that a valid marriage rite had not been constituted.¹⁹

Marriage before a large number of witnesses, such as cannot always be conveniently procured, is not to be readily insisted upon as indispensable under any statute.²⁰ § 1196. Legalizing Defective Marriages; Legislative Marriage.

Defective marriages have in some instances been legalized by statute; as where parties within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity have united. So with marriages before a person professing to be a clergyman or justice of the peace, but without actual authority. On principle, in fact, there seems no reason to doubt that any government, through its legislative branch, may unite a willing pair in matrimony, as well as pass general laws for that purpose.²¹ But though legislative divorces are not unfrequent, a legislative marriage is something unknown, not to say uncalled for. And in this country, questions of fundamental constraint under a written constitution might arise, even where the cure only of a defective marriage was sought by the legislature; inasmuch as the intervening rights of third persons might thereby be prejudiced.

§ 1197. Second Ceremony Between Same Parties.

A second marriage ceremony between persons already married is of no effect if the first is legal but will be effective if the first is void.²² § 1198. War Marriages.

During the war the so-called "war marriages" gave the courts and draft boards much trouble. Under the draft law of 1917 draft boards are directed to scrutinize marriages contracted since May 18, 1917, and classify men without reference thereto unless they prove affirmatively that the marriage was not contracted with a view to evade the draft. The finding of the draft boards are furthermore final and cannot be reversed by the courts.²³

Marriages may be commonly celebrated by a minister²⁴ or by others with the consent of the parties²⁵ and as marriage is a civil contract it is not indispensable that it be performed by a clergyman²⁶ and the power is permissive and not mandatory.²⁷

§ 1200. Breach of Law by Person Officiating.

And where questions occur, as they do quite frequently, under penal statutes, which impose the exercise of discretion or of due formalities upon the minister or magistrate performing the ceremony, not only is such a person universally presumed to do rightly what he may be mulcted for doing wrongly, but his disregard of the penal prohibition will not invalidate the ceremony.²⁸ The several States treat the marrying functions and jurisdiction of both ministers of the gospel and civil magistrates with great liberality, rarely permitting a marriage to be disturbed upon any misapprehension in these respects.²⁹ § 1201. Celebration by One Without Authority.

A marriage celebrated by one without authority where the parties acted in good faith is valid³⁰ and marriages are not void merely because celebrated by one having no actual authority to do so,³¹ but a celebration has been held void not performed before an authorized person.³²

§ 1202. Marriage Not a Judicial Act.

The solemnization of a marriage is in no sense a judicial act even though performed by a judge and although performed in court no record should be made of it in the court records. It may be performed anywhere even though the clerk does not attend and at any time.³³ § 1203. Official Not Consenting to Ceremony.

The person officiating must take an active part and consent to the ceremony and it is not a valid marriage where the official declines to officiate and the parties go through the ceremony themselves in his presence.³⁴

A marriage ceremony may be valid although the minister who performed it did not believe it was a marriage ceremony at all.³⁵ Thus where two Catholics had been granted a divorce which was not recognized by their church and they decided to remarry and a priest came in and read the marriage ceremony in the customary form with the use of the ring and the usual questions and answers, this is a valid marriage although the priest thought he was simply giving his blessing to their reunion, and that he could not remarry them as they had never been divorced in the view of the church.³⁶ § 1205. Liability for Celebrating Prohibited Marriage.

One may be guilty of solemnizing a marriage contrary to law although he told the parties that they could not lawfully marry³⁷ or although he was ignorant that the parties were under the legal age.³⁸ In this class of statutes, the minister or magistrate who has made himself amenable to the law cannot in general defend on the plea that he acted in good faith.³⁹

One marrying a minor without the parent's consent may be still liable to the penalty though the husband may be thereby released by the provisions of a law releasing one from jail, who marries a woman seduced by him.⁴⁰ Where the statute makes it a crime to solemnize a marriage the one who procured the solemnization may be liable as an accessory.⁴¹

CONSENT OF PARENTS OR GUARDIAN.

- SECTION 1207. English Law.
 1208. American Law.
 1209. Validity of Marriages Without Parental Consent.
 1210. When Guardian Should Consent.
 1211. Stepparent.

§ 1207. English Law.

The consent of parents and guardians is one of those formalities which marriage celebration acts now commonly prescribe in the interest of society, as they do banns or the procurement of a license generally for better publicity.

The consent of parents or guardians was not necessary to perfect a marriage at the common law.⁴³ But Lord Hardwicke's Act made the marriage of minors void without such consent first obtained.⁴⁴ This proved intolerable. A bona fide and apparently regular marriage was in one instance set aside, after important rights had intervened, for no other cause than that an absent father, supposed to be dead, but turning up unexpectedly, had failed to bestow his permission, and the mother had acted in his stead.⁴⁵ Gretna Green marriages, on Scotch soil, became the usual recourse for children with unwilling protectors.⁴⁶ Hence the law was afterwards modified, so that, without the requisite consent, marriages, although forbidden, might remain valid.⁴⁷

§ 1208. American Law.

In this country statutes commonly require that minors shall before marrying obtain the consent of their parents or guardians and the expression of consent is in some States made a prerequisite to granting the marriage license.⁴⁸

§ 1209. Validity of Marriages Without Parental Consent.

At common law the marriage of infants under the age of seven years was absolutely void but persons at least seven years old and under the age of consent could contract a voidable marriage. But where the minors are over the age of consent and the statute requires the consent of parents or guardians to their marriage⁴⁹ a marriage duly solemnized although without the consent of the parents or guardians of minors as required by law is valid,⁵⁰ as statutes invalidating the marriage of minors without the consent of the parents or guardians are directory merely and a marriage under a license in violation of such statute is valid.⁵¹ Where the law provides that a license may be issued for minors if the written consent of the parents is obtained this does not invalidate the marriage of minors above the common-law age of consent married without such consent of the parents. Lack of such consent does

Dole*, 20 La. Ann. 378. The language of some statutes leaves the point in doubt as to whether marriages without the consent of parents renders the marriage void or only subjects offending parties, including the person who performs the ceremony, to a penalty. But the latter is, of course, to be presumed, rather than the former.

not invalidate the marriage but only subjects those who have neglected to acquire it to the penalties of the law.⁵²

Following the general principle that no act good at common law is void unless the statutes expressly so provide it is commonly held that a marriage otherwise valid is not made invalid by the fact that it was held under a license issued to one under age without the consent of the parent or guardian as required by law. The officer issuing the license may be subject to a penalty but this does not affect the marriage itself.⁵³

§ 1210. When Guardian Should Consent.

Clandestine marriages are doubtless to be discouraged, and the law will willingly inflict penalties upon clergymen, magistrates, and all others who aid the parties in their unwise conduct, the penalty serving in a measure as indemnification to the parent or guardian; but experience shows that legislation cannot safely interpose much farther.

Under such statutes (which, however, vary in language and scope in different States), it has been held that if a minor has both parent and guardian, the guardian should consent in preference;⁵⁴ though it might appear more proper to consider which has the actual care and government of the minor. One who has relinquished the parental control cannot sue for the penalty; but a father's unfitness is not pertinent to the issue of uniting his minor child in marriage without his leave,⁵⁵ nor ground for accepting the mother's sole consent instead.⁵⁶ Where there is no parent or guardian of a minor and the law requires the consent of a parent or guardian a guardian must be appointed before a license can issue.⁵⁷

MARRIAGE MADE WHEN PARTIES NOT PRESENT TOGETHER.

SECTION 1212. Marriage by Proxy or Mail.

1213. Marriage by Telephone.

§ 1212. Marriage by Proxy or Mail.

Marriage by proxy or without the presence of the parties at a ceremony was formerly allowed in the Roman law and was also recognized under the canon law,⁵⁹ and the English law until the eighteenth century.⁶⁰ It was thus a part of the common law of England at the time of the settlement of this country, and was probably incorporated by the colonists as such into their common law. Statutes in many States requiring certain details as to the ceremony and presence of the parties have rendered this common law obsolete, but in States where common-law marriages are still recognized, and where consummation of the marriage is not necessary for its validity, there seems no reason to doubt that a marriage by written contract of parties not in the presence of each other may be valid.⁶¹ Such a marriage will be governed by the law of the State where the contract is made, which is the place where the acceptance is mailed,⁶² although there is strong authority that a marriage by mail can be sustained only when valid by the laws where both live.⁶³

The exigencies of the Great War revived the interest in such marriages, and laws were passed in Belgium, France and Italy to enable soldiers in service to contract marriages with women at home.⁶⁴ In this country the Adjutant General, on December 21, 1918, advised the military authorities that they might assist soldiers in contracting marriages with women at home, advising them, however, of the dangers of this course, that the validity of such marriages would depend on the law of their domicile, and that the legality of such marriages was in this country a matter of grave uncertainty.

§ 1213. Marriage by Telephone.

The validity of a marriage by telephone has never been authoritatively settled, but instances of such marriages are reported during the exigencies of war times.⁶⁵ If both man and woman are at the time in States where a common-law marriage is recognized, it seems that such a marriage is valid as a contract by telephone is valid, and no greater ceremony should be required in such States for a marriage than for any other contract. But in States where the statutes require certain ceremonies it seems very doubtful whether such a marriage would be sustained under precedents frowning on official acts by telephone,⁶⁶ but there is always a chance that the courts will strain a point to assist a brave man in uniform.

MARRIAGE LICENSE AND RECORD.

SECTION 1214. Who May Issue.

- 1215. Presumption of Validity of License.
- 1216. Banns.
- 1217. License Improperly Issued.
- 1218. Fraud in Obtaining License.
- 1219. Effect of Failure to Obtain License on Ceremonial Marriage.
- 1220. Effect of Failure to Obtain License on Common-Law Marriage.
- 1221. Official Issuing License Charged With Duty of Inquiry.
- 1222. Record.
- 1223. Fraudulent Certificate.

§ 1214. Who May Issue.

The license must be issued by the officer named in the statute.⁶⁷

§ 1215. Presumption of Validity of License.

Presumptions are indulged in favor of the validity of a license issued by an officer duly authorized.⁶⁸

The English law insists pretty strictly upon the publication of banns, whereas in this country, where church and State are divorced, this formality is now quite generally dispensed with,⁶⁹ although formerly required in some of the older States, but even there a marriage duly solemnized by a proper official is valid 67. Mahon v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 234, 79 S. W. 28 (deputy county clerk).

A marriage is not invalidated by the fact that the woman alone procured the license, nor by the fact that there was an interval of four months between the date of the license and the date of the marriage. In re Miller's Estate, 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 385.

although the banns were not published as required.⁷⁰ As to the due proclamation of banns, collateral points concerning ecclesiastical authority are inappropriate.⁷¹

§ 1217. License Improperly Issued.

A marriage solemnized without publication of banns as required by law, and without consent of parents or guardians, is valid between the parties,⁷² and violations of the law in issuing the license or other requirement of the statute will not render the marriage void.⁷³ Though the parties may have failed to observe certain formalities of license or registry, their marriage will generally be held good in both England and this country.⁷⁴ The same may be said of public officers upon whom the duty is imposed of issuing a proper license to suitable parties desiring marriage; which license, as our local statutes frequently provide, the magistrate or minister ought to require the parties to produce, before uniting them.⁷⁵

A marriage is not void merely because the wife failed to sign the proper papers, although the marriage was duly celebrated.⁷⁶

A marriage license may be void when signed by the issuing officer in blank and filled up with the names of the parties by the magistrate who officiated.⁷⁷

§ 1218. Fraud in Obtaining License.

In a prosecution for falsely swearing to the age of the girl in a marriage certificate application the defendant may show in defence that the statement was one which on reasonable grounds he believed to be true, but it is not enough that he did not know the facts, and the State is not bound to prove that he swore to something which he knew to be untrue.⁷⁸

§ 1219. Effect of Failure to Obtain License on Ceremonial Marriage.

In some States the statutory requirement of a license is regarded as directory only, and failure to obtain a valid license does not invalidate a marriage performed with proper ceremony,⁷⁹ while in other States such failure renders the marriage void.⁸⁰

§ 1220. Effect of Failure to Obtain License on Common-Law Marriage.

A statute requiring a license and certain form of celebration, but without expressly declaring other forms of marriage void,

If the relations between a man and woman, who were first cousins, prior to July 4, 1909, when marriages between cousins were prohibited, were such as to establish a valid common-law marriage, the enactment of the statute or the performance of an invalid ceremonial marriage would not affect the validity of the previous marriage by consent. does not render void a common-law marriage,⁸¹ but may do so.⁸² Marriage followed by cohabitation is valid although license required was not obtained.⁸³

At common law a religious ceremony in celebration of the civil contract was sufficient to make the marriage lawful. In view of the important considerations of morality and legitimacy involved it is manifestly a sound and just rule of construction that statutes providing for marriage licenses are not held to have the effect of nullifying for noncompliance with their terms of marriage valid at common law unless such an intention is plainly disclosed. The statutory provision for license to marry should not be regarded as mandatory and vital to the validity of a marriage in the absence of a clear indication of a legislative purpose that it should be so construed.⁸⁴

§ 1221. Official Issuing License Charged With Duty of Inquiry.

The duty of the person issuing the license is not ministerial solely, but he may be charged with the duty of making reasonable inquiry as to the identity or capacity of the parties to marry or their right to a license,⁸⁵ and the statute may provide a penalty recoverable for the issuing of a license improperly or without reasonable inquiry;⁸⁶ but in the absence of such statute a father who by marriage lost the services of his minor child cannot recover damages against an officer improperly issuing such license.⁸⁷

In such an action the question of what is a reasonable inquiry where there is no conflict in evidence is for the court,⁸⁸ and the burden is on the plaintiff to show that reasonable inquiry was not made.⁸⁹ A complaint alleging that the plaintiff is the "father" of the girl means the legal father.⁹⁰

Where the statute requires that the authorities before issuing a marriage license shall make reasonable inquiry to satisfy themselves that the applicants are of age, this is not done where the license is issued relying on the statements of two men unknown to the license office who turned out to be bad men. The mere personal appearance of an entire stranger is not sufficient.⁹¹

Where not rendered incompetent by the usual rules of evidence, as parties interested, parties to the record, and the like, the persons alleged to have been married may give their own testimony on that point; but to examine the question of competency in such cases is foreign to our present purpose.⁹⁶

§ 1225. Oral Evidence of Witnesses.

Direct proof of the marriage, other than by the record, is perhaps the most satisfactory of all. The fact may be established by the clergyman or magistrate who solemnized the marriage; or by any third person who was present at the ceremony.⁹⁷ § 1226. Declarations of Parties.

Circumstantial evidence may establish the fact of marriage. Thus, the admissions of either or both parties, or the public acknowledgment by one of the other, as a spouse, may be shown in the case of a clandestine marriage or under circumstances which render it difficult or impossible to adduce more direct testimony.⁹⁸ But proof of marriage in fact being needful at the outset, wherever better testimony is accessible, its production ought to be required. Deliberate admissions of marriage by one party are strong evidence against that party, and in civil cases where the other seeks to establish the fact. But admissions, and indirect testimony in general, seem unfavorably regarded in indictments for bigamy, and perhaps in actions for criminal conversation besides; presumptions, as we have seen, being here deemed insufficient proof of the fact, and strong extraneous proof being desired when the issue is so sternly presented against a defendant;¹ though the course favored by several cases is to weigh the confession or admission by the light of circumstances, and not exclude it utterly.² The declarations of parties, and other attendant circumstances of cohabitation, all of which are admissible, as part of the res gestæ, to show a virtuous intercourse between man and woman, must, together with the repute originating in consequence, and cohabitation or refutation thereof alone is not sufficient.²¹

§ 1230. Marriage Records.

More satisfactory than presumptions, which may always be rebutted, and in some cases, as we have seen, are quite insufficient, is the proof of a marriage in fact over and above presumptions. Record proof of a marriage celebration is always appropriate where the fact itself is at issue. In England, and probably all of the United States, the law requires marriages to be registered by the proper officer; parish church records being the more common in England, and town or civil records in America. These records are of great value as testimony, not necessarily because of the incidental signatures of parties, but because these are public records, kept in a public place, under authority of the law.²² Whether the issue be civil or criminal, the record-book may be offered in evidence, or a certificate of the particular record by the officer having custody of the book; or once more, any third person, competent to be sworn as a witness, may, under the sanction of his oath, verify the extract of a particular record made by himself.²³ But nothing more is thus proved than the facts which ought to be entered in the register, and the testimony may be contradicted or shown to be a forgery or unauthorized entry.²⁴

The official record of the marriage may be put in evidence thereof,²⁵ but is not necessary.²⁶

The nonexistence of a marriage record cannot be shown by the § 1232. Collateral Records.

§ 1233. Marriage Certificate.

A marriage certificate is an instrument which certifies a marriage and is executed by the person officiating,³² and is an instrument not admissible as evidence per se, according to the better class of cases, and yet, in connection with testimony upon oath, establishing a marriage in fact, and, more particularly when shown to have been given contemporaneously with the marriage, a valuable piece of testimony,³³ and may be introduced as evidence of the marriage.³⁴

A marriage certificate, or record, or certificate of record, shows only that two persons bearing the names mentioned were united at the time and place specified; and hence the identity of those names with the persons whose marriage in fact is at issue remains to be established by other proof, circumstantial being in general sufficient for that purpose,³⁵ and the marriage certificate is not conclusive on the identity of the parties.³⁶

1257. Burden of Proof.

§ 1238. Presumptions; Kinds of in General.

We now proceed to consider finally the difficult subject of proving a marriage. It is upon presumptions that marriage maintains a legal footing in many instances where actual proof would be difficult, if not impossible. Mr. Bishop states three presumptions in support of marriage, all of which have been incidentally suggested in the preceding sections: I. The presumption of innocence; II. The presumption that official persons have done their duty; III. The general presumption which favors marriage. The first two are of wide application, but the third is peculiar to the present subject.

§ 1239. Presumption of Innocence.

I. The first presumption, that of innocence, we have seen supporting the informal marriage ceremony by words of present or future promise.⁴²⁻⁴³ Very essential does it become to the latter; for there, the promise which is put in evidence relating only to the future, innocence, say the authorities, is presumed when copulation follows; or, in other words, the parties are supposed to have exchanged subsequently the requisite words of present promise, else copulation would not have taken place. A weak presumption surely, too favorable for human nature; and if, as at this day would be almost invariably the case in England and America, those words of future promise evidently related to the future celebration of a marriage in form, that presumption breaks down utterly.⁴⁴ When a man and woman agree to marry hereafter, are they likely to mean that they will do no more than exchange vows equally private, when custom, statute, and common sense require that a minister or magistrate shall perform the ceremony and give it some publicity? If they do in populous localities, then the woman must be presumed weak either in chastity or in proper regard for the means of defending it.⁴⁵ § 1240. Presumption of Performance of Official Duty.

II. The second presumption, that official persons have done their duty, especially if penalties are imposed for the violation of that duty, supports the regularity of a ceremonial marriage in compliance with statute, and renders a simple record of marriage after the customary mode, or simple proof that the official person performed the ceremony, prima facie evidence that in prerequisites and details all was performed rightly.⁴⁶

§ 1241. Presumption Favoring Marriage.

III. The third presumption is that the fact of marriage should be favored under all circumstances. Semper præsumitur pro matrimonio is the universal maxim of law. If, therefore, a marriage has once been shown, whether directly or by circumstantial evidence, the assumption must be that the marriage was legal and legally performed; and they who seek to prove otherwise have the burden of doing so. Lapse of time strengthens this presumption, which, being in the interest of offspring and of the stability of the marital relation, is in the interest of the public likewise.⁴⁷ § 1242. Presumption of Continuance of Life.

IV. A fourth presumption, that of life, is mentioned in the extent the effect of the three presumptions already considered. books, which affects the issue of bigamy, and counteracts to some. The general rule of law is that where a person — as, for instance, one of the marriage parties — is absent and not heard from during seven years, death should be presumed, but that meantime the presumption is that the life continues. Such presumption is not, however, conclusive; nor can it be said after seven years that the person lived during that whole period, or died at any intermediate date in particular. Circumstances may favor the idea that death occurred much sooner, or much later, or not at all; and, after all, this presumption is chiefly for legal convenience, and to fix the standard of innocence; for should the missing person eventually prove alive, the new marriage or the administration founded upon an erroneous supposition of death falls to the ground.⁴⁸

§ 1243. Presumption of Common-Law Marriage.

To raise a presumption of a common-law marriage the evidence must be clear and convincing.⁴⁹

Where parties attempt to make a common-law marriage which is forbidden by statute, and continue to live together after the law is amended and common-law marriages made legal, it will be presumed that they consummated a common-law marriage as soon as the bar was removed.⁵⁰ § 1244. Presumption of Foreign Ceremonial Marriage.

It is presumed that a ceremony performed in a foreign country is valid.⁵¹

§ 1245. Presumptions of Valid Marriage.

There is a presumption in favor of the validity of a marriage shown to exist de facto,⁵² and a marriage will be presumed to have taken place at the place where the acts relied on as proving a marriage took place.⁵³ § 1246. Legitimacy of Children Favored.

The legitimacy of children is strongly favored in the application of these presumptions, and for their sake even more than their parents. As a matter of proof, a child born in wedlock is taken to be the lawful offspring of the pair, even though the mother were living in adultery at the time of the conception, provided the husband had intercourse with her at the time, or perhaps only access; and whatever the moral probabilities of such a case, neither husband nor wife can testify as to non-access, nor will evidence of unlawful paternity, except the strongest and most conclusive, be allowed to disturb the legal presumption so essential to an innocent child's welfare.⁵⁴ So, in general, the presumption in favor of the validity of a marriage appears to be stronger where the legitimacy of children is involved than where property interests alone are in question.⁵⁵

"The presumption thus established by law," observes Lord

See Irving v. Ford, 179 Mass. 216, 60 N. E. 491 (no presumption as to validity of marriage between slaves).

The authority of the officer or clergyman performing the marriage ceremony and all the prerequisites of a valid marriage will be presumed until the contrary is made to appear. In re Sloan's Estate, 50 Wash. 86, 96 P. 684.

The presumption of legality arising from a ceremonial marriage, followed by cohabitation of the parties as husband and wife, is founded upon the motives which govern human conduct and upon the policy of our social system. The conclusion of illegality involves the assumption that the parties have exposed themselves to the penal consequences of illegal acts, and operates to bastardize their offspring, and the strength of the presumption increases with the lapse of time through which the parties have cohabited as husband and wife. Sparks v. Ross, 72 N. J. Eq. 762, 65 A. 977.

Langdale, "is not to be rebutted by circumstances which only create doubt and suspicion; but it may be wholly removed by proper and sufficient evidence."⁵⁶ While, however, a wife cannot, by her evidence, bastardize her own offspring, she is permitted, from the necessity of the case, to prove criminal conversation with a third person, a point collateral to legitimacy and matrimonial access.⁵⁷ The presumption is that a child born after the nuptials, of which the mother was pregnant at the time, is the child of the married pair; but, as we have shown, fraud upon an innocent partner may be established instead, by a birth following scandalously soon upon the ceremony, and may afford him ground for seeking to annul the marriage.⁵⁸ Proof of cohabitation, however, unaccompanied by reputation of marriage, will not raise a presumption in favor of the legitimacy of offspring.⁵⁹ § 1247. Cohabitation and Repute.

To apply, now, these combined presumptions for proving a marriage. Proof of actual marriage is rarely required, except in prosecutions for bigamy and actions for criminal conversation.⁶⁰ In other instances a prima facie case is made out from cohabitation, reputation, admissions, conduct of the parties, and other like circumstances. For when man and woman live together with constancy as husband and wife, not visiting or receiving one another's visits merely, neither of them occupying apparently the station of menial, the presumption arises, all other things being equal, that they are married to one another.⁶¹ This presumption suffices for most controversies where the fact of marriage is put at issue, including questions of legitimacy, of a widow's right of inheritance and dower, and civil cases in general which involve property rights. But cohabitation alone is not sufficient proof of marriage; there must appear a matrimonial cohabitation, and this justified by contemporaneous behavior of the parties, such as should furnish to society the reputation of marriage. Cohabitation and repute go together; and of so much importance does our law regard the judgment formed by acquaintances and kinsfolk on the point of marriage, from their opportunities of observation, that some authorities favor the idea that repute alone would be prima facie proof of marriage,⁶²⁻⁶³ though in vindication of such repute the cohabitation upon which it is founded ought to be stated besides, that all evidence may be carefully weighed by court and jury as to the main fact of marriage.⁶⁴

60. In an action for criminal conversation, and indictments for bigamy or polygamy, the issue tendered is that one of two cohabitations or acts of commerce is criminal, and the other innocent, and hence stricter proof is requisite than usual. Indictments for adultery, incest, etc., have also been held to require strict proof in a few instances.

Reputation, favorable or unfavorable, is founded on general and not singular opinions, being the social verdict upon the pair, as one may say, and a verdict society rarely fails to give from its means of knowledge. Where reputation is found divided, or the cohabitation is partial and irregular, the virtue of the cohabitation is discredited at once, and the presumption of marriage fails unless strengthened by other means.⁶⁵ But it is said that a marriage may be established upon the preponderance of repute, although there be repute against the reputed marriage as well as for it.⁶⁶

Nor, after all, do cohabitation and repute afford more than a presumption of marriage; direct evidence that no marriage had been contracted, or even that the man cohabited with two women at the same time, would destroy the inference of virtue; and in every case the presumption of virtue and lawful marriage may be rebutted,⁶⁷ but not where a criminal offence is involved in failure illicit relation continued as such may be rebutted by evidence of an actual marriage between the parties.⁷⁷ If a particular marriage celebration is set up to overcome the unfavorable presumption arising from illicit connection, that particular marriage should be proved.⁷⁸

The presumption in favor of decency and virtue may be overcome, therefore, by counter-presumption. And as a cohabitation illicitly begun is presumed to so continue until proof of change, a marriage will not, in England or most parts of the United States, be presumed from such cohabitation and repute, unless something open and unequivocal, like a legal marriage ceremony, upon fit opportunity, puts both parties in a virtuous relation. But States and countries, if there be such, which favor informal marriage, instead of requiring ceremonies, might show, by way of presumption, more favor in this respect.⁷⁹

the presumption in favor of the validity of the second marriage.⁸⁵ A second marriage raises no presumption that a first marriage was illegal,⁸⁶ and in the absence of other evidence it will be presumed that a prior marriage has been dissolved and that a second marriage is legal,⁸⁷ but the presumption does not arise where it appears that one deserted his former wife without cause⁸⁸ or where there is positive evidence that the prior divorce does not

Where a married man disappeared and was not heard from for seven years, and his wife married again within that time although there is no presumption as to the date of the death of the absent husband, still it will be presumed that he was dead at the time of the second marriage and that this marriage is valid. exist.⁸⁹ There is much confusion in the authorities but usually evidence that no divorce was procured by either party in the jurisdiction where either of them lived may overcome the presumption in favor of the subsequent marriage of one of them,⁹⁰ while in New York it seems to be held that if the presumption of divorce is rebutted a presumption that the first marriage was annulled will take its place.⁹¹ Even evidence that a widow had an undivorced husband living in a foreign country may be insufficient to rebut the presumption of the validity of the second marriage.⁹²

The burden is upon a person who asserts the illegality of a marriage to prove such illegality and where a second marriage is shown as a fact a strong presumption exists in favor of its legality which is not overcome by mere proof of a prior marriage and that the wife had not obtained a divorce before her second marriage. The parties attacking such second marriage have the burden of proof to show that neither party to the first marriage had obtained a divorce.⁹³

The usual presumption where a marriage is proven is that such matrimonial relation continued in the absence of evidence of death or divorce. But where both parties marry again in consequence of a statement of the husband that he has obtained a divorce and both parties subsequently live with new partners for many years the presumption mentioned is outweighed by the stronger presumption of innocence and morality, and of the validity of a second marriage solemnized according to law. When a second marriage has been entered into in good faith and all parties have acted on the assumption that the first is no longer in force, the natural inference and the prevailing presumption is that no legal impediment existed to entering into the new matrimonial relation and those who seek to impeach the second marriage take upon themselves the burden of showing that the first has not been dissolved.⁹⁴

Some States, however, do not recognize the presumption of divorce as terminating the first marriage⁹⁵ and others will not entertain the presumption in the absence of a foundation in fact where the spouse has not shown by his behavior that the marriage was terminated.⁹⁶

In an action by one claiming to be the widow of the deceased for his death, she sustains the burden of proof by showing that she was married to the deceased in Tennessee, that he deserted her and that she never heard of him again although after seven years absence supposing him dead she married again. It further appeared that he had married again in Alabama. The court refuses to indulge in any presumption that the second marriage was legal or that the deceased had obtained a valid divorce, no notice of any proceedings ever having been served on the plaintiff, and the court remarks that no divorce obtained by substituted service without actual notice would be valid anyway.⁹⁷ § 1253. Lack of Record.

There is no presumption from a lack of record of a marriage that no marriage was solemnized.⁹⁸

§ 1254. Secret Marriages.

There is a presumption against the validity of secret marriages.²⁰ § 1255. Removal of Impediment to Marriage.

Where persons desiring to marry enter into an illicit relationship when one of them is incompetent to marry and the obstacle is removed their continued cohabitation raises a presumption of a marriage immediately after the impediment is removed.¹

§ 1256. Rebuttal of Presumptions.

The presumption of a marriage arising by cohabitation may be rebutted by evidence of facts inconsistent therewith² but the rebutting evidence must be strong and conclusive³ as evidence of separation of the parties⁴ and the marriage of one of them to another or by other direct evidence.⁵

Positive evidence of non-assent to an irregular marriage weighs against the presumption of its validity.⁶

Presumptions arising from the acts of the parties will be controlled by direct evidence of what the marriage was,⁷ and the presumption from reputation will not disprove an actual marriage.⁸

§ 1257. Burden of Proof.

The burden of proof as to marriages is so governed by the presumptions treated in the prior sections of this chapter that the subject may well be treated here. The presumptions as to marriages in ordinary cases place the burden of proof on those who deny the effect of the presumptions. For example, the burden is on one who asserts the illegality of a marriage,⁹ even of one who had been married previously.¹⁰ The burden of impeaching a new marriage on the ground of the old lies on the impeaching party, and the conviction of the guilty bigamist has nothing to do with the case.¹¹ But, as Mr. Justice Wayne once observed, prudence and delicacy impose such restraints until the fact is so generally known as not to be a matter of doubt, or until the former marriage "has been impeached in a judicial proceeding, wherever that may be done."¹² So the burden is on one who asserts the legality of a marriage where the relations between the parties were adulterous in their origin¹³ and is on one who would set up the legality of a secret marriage of which no record was made,¹⁴ but the burden is on one denying the legality of a foreign marriage.¹⁵

Where a marriage takes place of one under the age of consent the burden is on one claiming ratification to prove it.¹⁶

The burden of proof mentioned in these cases is really the burden of going forward with evidence in cases where the presumptions furnish a prima facie case and require the other side to meet it in some way. This must not be confused with the burden of proving one's case, strictly speaking, as this is a burden which no presumption can shift. There are many cases where evidence of a marriage is a necessary part of the plaintiff's case, and there the plaintiff must prove it. For example, one who has the burden of proving the legitimacy of a child has the burden also of proving the validity of the marriage of its parents,¹⁷ and the burden is on one claiming to be the widow of deceased,¹⁸ or heir, to prove marriage.¹⁹

WHAT LAW GOVERNS MARRIAGE.

SECTION 1258. Common Law.

§ 1258. Common Law.

In the absence of statute the validity of marriages will be governed by the common law.²⁰ § 1259. Statutory Provisions.

Statutory provisions as to marriages refer usually only to marriages in the State.²¹ § 1260. Law When Celebrated Governs.

A marriage valid by the law governing both parties when made will be recognized everywhere²² if valid by the law in force where it was performed.²³ § 1261. Law Where Celebrated Governs.

Marriage is favored beyond ordinary contracts in all nations. It is an old and well-recognized rule (subject, as we shall see, however, to some exceptions) that a marriage lawful where celebrated is lawful everywhere; and that a marriage unlawful where celebrated is unlawful everywhere.²⁴ This rule, public policy, common morality, and the comity of nations demand shall be enforced. Even when parties leave their own State or country, for the express purpose of evading the legal requirements, marry abroad, and then return, the marriage is to be sustained, unless, at all events, fundamental essentials have been thereby disregarded. This doctrine was very liberally applied in England, when the famous Gretna Green method of union was pronounced indissoluble.²⁵ So in this country, where persons disqualified by the laws of their own State cross over into another.²⁶

In all such cases the principle of ordinary contracts is disregarded, and the lex loci contractus is permitted to prevail over the lex domicilii. But this doctrine, although favored by most writers on public law, has not received their unanimous support. Huberus, a continental jurist, maintained — contrary to the view afterwards expressed in Compton v. Bearcroft, by the English courts — that where parties go to a foreign country, in order to evade their own laws which require the assent of parent or guardian, their marriage should be deemed invalid; for, he observes, such acts tend ad eversionem juris, and should not be encouraged.²⁷ This opinion finds favor in France and Holland. And there is a statute in requirements of foreign statutes will render a marriage performed in a foreign country void.³²

A marriage invalid where celebrated is as a rule invalid everywhere. But this principle, being unfavorable to marriage, is applied with more hesitation than its converse.³³ Citizens sojourning abroad, parties made amenable to the general laws of another country and yet retaining customs of their own, quasi foreigners who do not forfeit their original allegiance, often have special privileges shown them by the comity of nations. Thus, Protestants in a Roman Catholic country have been allowed to marry after their own forms.³⁴ Settlers from foreign parts are often permitted to take their national customs with them.³⁵ There are statutes, both in Great Britain and the United States, which permit citizens to marry abroad in presence of certain accredited representatives of their government, as ministers and consuls; and such marriages are considered lawful, though one of the parties be a foreigner.³⁶ Even a marriage contracted on board a vessel on the high seas may be presumed to be of international validity, and should be upheld if possible.³⁷ Whatever may be pronounced by the courts, in the adopted country of an emigrant, a marriage lawful by the laws of his native land would in his native land generally be upheld, if he had not forfeited his allegiance. And the burden of proof is on whoever affirms the illegality of a marriage between suitable parties which was solemnized abroad.³⁸ § 1262. Marriages in Violation of Public Policy.

The only exception to this rule of the lex loci is that marriages prohibited by public policy in the State where they are brought in question will not be upheld though valid where celebrated.³⁹ For example, the court has a right to annul a marriage between its citizens under the age of consent although celebrated outside the State in a jurisdiction where it was valid,⁴⁰ and a marriage in a foreign country recognized by its laws, but void here as being incestuous, will not be recognized in this country;⁴¹ but a marriage between relatives valid in the State where made may be

Mr. Wharton, in his very scholarly work, maintains that there are three distinct theories on this subject: (1) as generally maintained by English writers and the courts, that matrimonial capacity is determined by the law of the place of marriage; which he considers open to objection; (2) that it is determined by the law of the marrying parties' home; which he also considers open to objection; (3) that, as to marriages at home, capacity is determined by home law, and as to marriages abroad, "by the common law of Christendom;" and this last theory he prefers to the others. Ib., §§ 160-165. As to conflict in the mode of celebrating marriage, see ib., § 169-185.

upheld in another State where the parties live, which State forbids such marriages.⁴²

So a marriage between cousins valid where made will be sustained in another State which declares such marriages incestuous, and in which the parties afterwards reside. The only exception to the general rule upholding marriages valid where made is where they are between kindred so close as to render the marriage repugnant to common decency and to the generally accepted opinion of Christendom, which relates only to persons in direct line of consanguinity and brothers and sisters, and does not embrace cousins.⁴³

The reasoning of Lord Chancellor Campbell and other peers in the English case of Brook v. Brook, which went on appeal to the House of Lords, would seem to carry the exception to the rule of comity so far as to include not only immoral marriages, but marriages in violation of a law of domicile which absolutely forbids such unions everywhere.⁴⁴ The point actually sustained, however, in this case, was the invalidity of a marriage by affinity in a foreign country, where such marriages are lawful; but which have always been regarded as within the prohibition of God's law in England. The doctrine claimed, therefore, seems in reality that each nation shall define God's law for itself. The lex loci contractus, we may remark in passing, does not seem of necessity to determine such legal consequences of a foreign marriage as the legitimation of antenuptial offspring.⁴⁵

The marriage abroad of one attainted of treason is lawful. Kynnaird v. Lealie, L. R. 1 C. P. 389.

A court is bound to take notice of foreign laws, when those laws are clearly established. And in a certain instance the English courts, out of regard for the laws of the nativity and contemplated domicile of foreign subjects who had been married on English soil, disregarded the validity of the marriage under English laws so far as to entertain a petition for pronouncing nullity. Portuguese first cousins had thus married in London in accordance with the requirements of English law. Returning to Portugal, they did not cohabit as husband and wife, for by the law of Portugal marriages between first cousins are declared incestuous and null, unless the Pope grants a dispensation. Sir R. Phillimore held that the court of place of contract was not bound to treat the marriage as null.⁴⁶ But upon appeal this decision was reversed.⁴⁷

There is much conflict as to the validity of marriages involving miscegenation. It has been held that a marriage between a white person and a negro will not be recognized in a State prohibiting such unions although valid where made,⁴⁸ although such a marriage is more favorably regarded when the parties were actually domiciled in the State where the marriage took place.⁴⁹

So where a negro woman owns land in a State where marriages between whites and negroes are prohibited and declared void, and the woman moves into another State where such marriages are allowed and there marries a white man and dies there, her husband is entitled to inherit the land as her heir. The validity of the marriage is governed by the law of the State where it occurred and where the parties lived at the time.⁵⁰

While a marriage valid where made is valid anywhere, the converse is also true, and a marriage contrary to public policy where made will not be upheld in another jurisdiction. So where an epileptic left the State of his domicile and married in a State expressly forbidding such a marriage, the marriage will not be affirmed in the State of the domicile, as the courts will there give it no higher value than it had where celebrated. The court refuses to hold that the prohibition against the marriage of epileptics is contrary to the public policy of the State which forbids the marriage of idiots, as it is recognized that epilepsy is a serious mental disease.⁵¹ Thus is seen a further tendency to maintain that while forms and ceremonies of marriage are governed by the laws of the place of celebration, such essentials as public policy may deem fundamental, the State will uphold where such essentials are being violated to the detriment of its social morals, and most especially as against palpable evasions of such policy.⁵²

Nor, we apprehend, would the marriages of such as are mentally and physically incapable. In Conway v. Beazley, the English courts refused to recognize a Scotch divorce and set aside a second marriage, but the facts showed a clear case of bigamy.⁵³

These fundamentals, it is said by the courts of such a State, depend upon and are governed by the laws of the country where the parties are domiciled at the time of the marriage, and in which the matrimonial residence is contemplated. Kinney v. Commonwealth, 30 Gratt. 858. Cf. State v. Ross, 76 N. C. 242, and State v. Kennedy, 76 N. C. 251, where such evasion, in a marriage between white and negro contrary to North Carolina laws, is made the plain point of distinction. The sensitiveness of a sovereignty to its own marriage policy must, in reality, dictate the line of decision in all such perplexing disputes, so long as no recognized umpire determines between States in such matters.

usually be valid elsewhere,⁵⁴ but although the marriage was valid where made the law of the domicile may, for reasons of public policy, refuse to recognize it.⁵⁵ A marriage contracted in another State with intention to reside in the husband's State will be regarded as made in the latter State as far as the marital rights of the parties are concerned.⁵⁶ § 1264. Marriage by Mail.

A common-law marriage by letter between persons in different States is governed by the law of the State where the offer of marriage was received and accepted.⁵⁷

§ 1265. Prohibition on Remarriage in Divorce Decree.⁵⁸

A marriage valid where made will usually be upheld even in a State where one of the parties had been divorced and where a decree had been entered prohibiting his remarriage,⁵⁹ but it has been held that a statute forbidding remarriage after divorce is so drawn as to have extra-territorial effect and invalidates a marriage made in another State,⁶⁰ and the validity of such a marriage may depend on whether the parties were domiciled in the State where they remarried. Thus, if they go out of the State which imposed the prohibition and remarry, and immediately return, the marriage is void in the first State, while under this view if they acquire a domicile in the State where they marry the marriage will be recognized in the first State.⁶¹

§ 1266. Leaving State to Evade Its Laws.

Where persons go out of the State for the purpose of evading its marriage laws and return after the ceremony, the marriage so performed is void unless valid under the laws of the State of the domicile.⁶²

A marriage made by a minor may be annulled by the court of the domicile of the parties although they left the State temporarily and were married in another State where such marriages were voidable merely and never cohabited as man and wife, but returned to the State of their domicile.

The opinion of the court is based on the right of a government to determine the status of its own citizens and prescribe the terms and conditions upon which their marital relations may be changed, and where such marriage is contrary to the public policy of the State it should be annulled. The court admit that a different decision might have been reached if there had been cohabitation and the possibility of bastardizing issue.⁶³

So the validity of a marriage contracted by citizens of one State in another State, to which they have gone to evade the laws of their domicile, may be inquired into by the courts of the domicile.⁶⁴

CHAPTER XXI.

RESTRAINT OF MARRIAGE.

- SECTION 1267. Wills; English Rule.
1268. Wills; American Rule.
1269. Bequest Conditioned on Separation.
1270. Restraint on Remarriage of Widows.
1271. Restraint on Marriage With Particular Person.
1272. Contracts.

§ 1267. Wills; English Rule.

The policy of restraining marriage is treated with disfavor by our law, which, on the contrary, seems disposed to encourage the institution, though not to the extent practised by some countries of openly promoting its observance, or forcing private inclination in the conjugal direction. Numerous cases, those particularly which construe the provisions of testamentary trusts, have laid it down that the general restraint of marriage is to be discouraged. Accordingly a condition subsequent, annexed by way of forfeiture to a gift, legacy, or bequest, in case the donee or legatee should marry, will be held void and inoperative, as a restraint upon marriage; and so as to both income and capital.⁶⁵ But marriage and remarriage are differently viewed in this respect; and it is well settled that forfeiture by condition subsequent in case a widow shall marry again must be upheld as valid, whether that widow be the beneficiary through her husband or some other person. Does the latter rule apply equally to widow and widower, woman and man? Upon full consideration the English chancery held, on appeal (reversing the decision of the lower tribunal), that it does; and accordingly sustained a proviso under the will of a certain testatrix, by which property bequeathed in trust, with income payable to the surviving husband, went over upon his marrying again; this interesting point being raised for the first time.⁶⁶

The English decisions, on the whole, do not strenuously resist these restraints upon marriage in testamentary trusts. It is held that a gift to one's widow on condition that she retire immediately into a convent is upon a good condition precedent.⁶⁷ Also, that it is a good condition subsequent which forfeits a gift to one's brother in case he marries "a domestic servant," or one of lower degree, degrading his own family.⁶⁸ And it is doubtful whether the rule discouraging restraint of marriage can extend to devises of land; though on principle there should be no distinction between devises and gifts or bequests in this respect.⁶⁹

§ 1268. Wills; American Rule.

If an intention on the part of the testator to impose a general restraint upon the marriage of a devisee is established, then such restriction is void, and the devisee will take an absolute estate. The great weight of authority is to the effect that conditions annexed to a bequest or a devise, the tendency of which is unduly to restrict or restrain marriage, are contrary to public policy and void. So a devise to a daughter of a fee, "except she should marry, then at her death I desire that it shall revert to her legal

Rights are equal as to marrying again, so far as widow and widower are concerned, as all will readily admit. The lower court was probably influenced by considerations which medical men adduce, showing that marriage is more essential to a man's continuous well-being than a woman's, and that a widow, on the whole, is less likely to have sufficient reason for marrying again than a man. But this argument, if sound, is perhaps far-fetched, and James, L. J., on appeal, treated the subject more from the aspect of equal rights, as between the sexes, in the disposal of property. No act of parliament or decision of a court, he observed, established any distinction here between the second marriage of man or woman, and he knew of no reason for making it.

⁶⁷ Duddy v. Greaham, 39 L. T. (N. S.) 48.

⁶⁸ Jenner v. Turner, 29 W. R. 99.

⁶⁹ Jones v. Jones, 1 Q. B. D. 279.

heirs," gives her a fee and the condition is void. This is a gift of a fee to be cut down to a life estate in case of marriage.⁷⁰

So a provision in a will which gives certain property to an unmarried woman and provides that she shall take less if she marries is void as in restraint of marriage.⁷¹

In case of a gift of a life estate to daughters, but in case of their marriage then to be forfeited, the forfeiture is void as in restraint of marriage. But a provision for a life estate to daughters, providing that in case one should die without having been married the property should go to another, is not in restraint of marriage.⁷²

Where at the time a will was made the sister of the testator was living apart from her husband, a bequest is valid of money to be paid to the sister when the executor shall be convinced that she could not live with her husband. This is not an unreasonable restriction, but is manifestly intended to fulfil the testator's duty to the sister if she should be unable to live with her husband. It is significant that she is not to be the judge as to whether she can live with her husband.⁷³

§ 1269. Bequest Conditioned on Separation.

A legacy conditioned upon the death of the present wife of the legatee, the son of the testator, on his divorce from her or separation at the end of a year from such divorce or separation, or, if within the year he shall be married to a respectable woman, then he is to receive the income from a certain fund, is not void as against public policy.

The court holds that the condition is not in restraint of marriage, for it rather encourages a new marriage. The court remarks that it has never been the public policy of the State to compel people to live together when married regardless of their inaptitude for such cohabitation. To make the gift void it must appear that an illegal divorce or separation was intended, but where a legal proceeding is in the mind of the testator it is not against public policy.⁷⁴

A bequest on condition that the legatee is legally divorced from her husband is not one tending to induce the separation of husband and wife, and the condition is not therefore void. A will speaks as of the date of the testator's death, and until that event it is ambulatory and subject to change. Such a condition is plainly a condition precedent, and is not an inducement to obtain a divorce in the future, as to have such an effect it must be a condition subsequent. No subsequent divorce could avail the legatee or satisfy the condition.⁷⁵

Where the legatee and her husband are living apart a bequest to her so long as she is separated from her husband will be upheld as a provision made for her only while she is separated and not as an inducement to separation.⁷⁶

§ 1270. Restraint on Remarriage of Widows.

There is only one main qualification to the rule against total restraint of marriage, and that is an exception touching widows. It seems settled law that men have a sort of mournful property right, so to speak, in the viduity of their wives, and that a grant or devise to them may be defeated by the violation of a condition subsequent providing for the grant or devise becoming inoperative or reverting in case of remarriage. It is a curiosity of the law that when a wife makes a grant with the same condition the general doctrine that conditions in restraint of marriage are void is applied with vigor.⁷⁷

A devise to the widow in fee simple so long as she remains unmarried gives her a defeasible fee rather than a life estate, and hence the husband's heirs have no interest to prevent her conveyance of the property before marriage.⁷⁸

A provision in a will giving the widow a life estate in all the testator's property, but if she should remarry a division of the property should take place, giving the widow a certain share, is not void as in restraint of marriage where the division on remarriage seems to be on an equitable basis between the widow and son. There is not here any indication that there was any designs on his part to deter his wife from contracting another marriage or that he had any objection whatever to her so doing. He simply felt that it was fair and necessary that she should have the use of all the residue of his estate for her support and maintenance so long as she remained his widow, but that if she married again, thus presumably obtaining other means of support, the son ought properly to receive his fair share of the property at once.⁷⁹

§ 1271. Restraint on Marriage With Particular Person.

Conditions in general restraint of marriage were at common law invalid, but conditions against marriage with particular classes of persons or specific persons are upheld. So a clause in a will that the daughter of the testator shall have only the income of a share of his property left to her if she marries F., or if F. is alive and she is unmarried, is valid. This is not an inducement to the murder of F. and is not void as against public policy.⁸⁰ And a bequest to a daughter conditioned on her not marrying a certain man named is valid although she is then engaged to marry him.⁸¹

It is settled law that a general restraint on marriage contained in a contract is void.⁸² Thus an agreement on condition that a woman would remain unmarried until the death of the promisor and remain in his employ is void as in restraint of marriage, and gives the woman no rights under it.⁸³

An agreement of settlement of a claim for breach of promise of marriage by which the man agrees to pay the woman a sum of money if she remains single for three years is void as in restraint of marriage, and leaves the woman free to bring suit for the breach of promise. The immediate tendency of this promise was to discourage marriage, and as a rule that tendency stamps such contracts as illegal.⁸⁴ But where parties are engaged to be married, and the woman refuses to marry at that time on account of family objections, but agrees to remain true to him during his life, this engagement cannot be converted into an agreement in restraint of marriage.⁸⁵

A contract for personal service is not rendered void and unenforceable simply because it contains a provision that the servant should remain unmarried. That particular clause is void and unenforceable, but where the restraint on marriage is a mere incident of the main object of the contract, and the servant does perform the services contracted for, the master's contract to give property in payment for the services rendered may be enforced.⁸⁶

In a deed by parents to their daughter with a condition that in case of her marriage the property reverts to the grantors, the condition is void, and therefore, as there is no limitation over, she has a fee.⁸⁷

§ 1274. Common-Law Action for Breach of Promise.

The action for breach of promise to marry applies the most prosaic of remedies to the most sentimental and romantic of complaints. The ashes are weighed on the cold altar after the sacred flame has gone out. Tender confidences, whispered protestations, the passionate phrase of love-letters, all those mysterious signs and symbols which love dotes upon, are carefully put together by twelve plain jurymen to establish a transaction, as though the wooing of a human heart were like bargaining for a pair of lungs. The consolation afforded to the afflicted suitor by the common law is that of pecuniary damages, on the principle that the other party has failed to fulfil the bargain.

Imprisonment for debt having been abolished in England and this country during the last century, a defendant cannot now be rightfully arrested for a cause of action which is based simply upon a breach of promise to marry, apart from any charge involving fraud or other legal turpitude.⁸⁸

§ 1275. Foundation of the Right of Action.

A contract to marry must be clearly distinguished from the marriage contract, or marriage institution, which, as we have seen, rests upon solemn foundations of its own. Promises to marry have been treated by the common law from the earliest times on the general footing of agreements. Policy forbids, of course, that specific performance of such a contract be enforced in equity or treated at this day as a "precontract" or species of marriage.⁸⁹ But for breach of the promise an action would always lie for damages at the common law, as in other cases of assumpsit; though in aggravated cases we shall find damages assessed somewhat after the manner of a tort.

Defendant is entitled to inspect his love-letters in the plaintiff's possession, bearing upon the amount of damages. Pape v. Lister, L. R. 6 Q. B. 242.

⁸⁹. Cheney v. Arnold, 15 N. Y. 345.

In the early reports, nevertheless, doubts were entertained as to the jurisdiction of common-law courts in such suits; and this, because the contract to marry was so nearly allied with marriage, while marriage from the time of Pope Alexander III, or the latter part of the twelfth century, was, in England, a matter for the cognizance of spiritual or ecclesiastical courts only. A motion to arrest judgment where the plaintiff had a verdict was argued on this ground in Holcroft v. Dickenson.⁹⁰ In 25 Car. II but three of the four judges (Chief Justice Vaughan dissenting) pronounced in favor of the plaintiff.

This historical uncertainty concerning the practice of bringing the common-law action in common-law courts was adverted to in an Indiana case,⁹¹ where counsel for the defence made the very ingenious argument that at the first settlement of the United States there was no such common-law right of action at all. Stretcher v. Parker,⁹² decided in 1639, was, as counsel contended, the earliest breach of promise case ever maintained in England in a common-law court. Admitting all this, however,⁹³ the question in Coke's day was one of jurisdiction local to England, and the doubt did not touch the right of action at all. "Indeed," observes Worden, J., "the principle which upholds such action is as old as the principle which gives damages in any case for the breach of a contract. And it is immaterial whether any case can be found in England prior to 1607, in which such action has been maintained."⁹⁴ § 1276. What Constitutes the Promise to Marry.

The general principles which underlie the whole law of contract must determine when and in what manner parties become bound to this most solemn of mutually dissoluble contracts. The practical difficulties are these: sexual fascination, not to add a common recognition of the very solemnity of such affairs, will draw a light-minded person very close to a promise who does not intend one; even with the serious the disposition is to leave more to inference than plain expression; and, moreover, mere favors and attentions on the one hand, or, on the other, deliberate arrangements between man and woman for dalliance and loose companionship, by no means amount to promises to marry.

If a man seriously and directly asks a woman to marry him, and she accepts with equal seriousness and directness, the case is a clear one of promise to marry; and the more so if these proposals have passed in writing. But doubts must arise where, as so often happens, circumstances less positive are relied upon to establish the engagement; and there might have been mere coquetry, flirtation, loose jest, or criminal purpose instead.

Some mutual contract to marry is requisite in order that one may sustain an action for breach of promise. But no particular form of words can be pronounced essential. It is sufficient if such language were used as to show that in fact the minds of the parties met.⁹⁵ And while the mutual intention should be serious and honorable, serious and honorable intention may be presumed in any case from acts and declarations justifying that inference; for where one so conducts as to induce the other to believe there is an engagement between them, and to act accordingly, and yet, after knowing that impression is produced, keeps on in the same tenor, such party, it is said, cannot set up a light or jesting purpose afterwards, or deny that the engagement in fact existed.⁹⁶

But as to the evidence of a contract to marry, more direct proof is now commonly required than formerly, since modern statutes permit parties themselves to take the stand, and tell their own story. While the old rule prevailed, excluding such interested witnesses, the contract was sometimes inferred from proof rather of such circumstances as usually attend an engagement. "This rule," observes Chief Justice Church, "permitted an implication, from what was proved, of a contract not proved."⁹⁷ Whatever the expression of earlier cases, then, a promise to marry cannot commonly be inferred alone at this day from one's devoted attention, frequent visits, and apparently exclusive attachment.⁹⁸ Nor from mere presents or letters, not to the point.⁹⁹ Nor from the plaintiff's sole announcements to friends, or her wedding preparations without the defendant's knowledge.^{99a} Nor from what the man's mother or father may have said to the woman without his knowledge, and vice versa.¹ Nor from the woman's unexplained possession of an engagement ring.² Neither a mere courtship nor even an intention to marry can constitute, per se, a contract to marry.³

But the giving and accepting of an engagement ring, if properly shown, becomes a most important circumstance. And the understanding of a marriage intention having been once elicited from pertinent words, acts, or conduct of the parties to this transaction (for a formal interchange of promises is not necessary), we may find their courtship, their correspondence, the presents which passed between them, admissions by the defendant, and the like, all material in their bearing upon the main conclusion, and still more material for fixing the amount of damages to be awarded in the suit.⁴

While mutual consent is understood to be at the foundation of the contract to marry, our law makes full allowance for the difference of sex. Logically speaking, either party might propose or accept; but it has been considered in the most enlightened ages the man's place to take the initiative and make the offer, the woman being the more passive of the two.⁵ And, in general, where a promise is proved on the part of the man, evidence showing that the woman demeans herself afterwards as if concurring in the engagement will be liberally construed, though not by itself, perhaps, so conclusively establishing an acceptance as formerly, for the reasons we have already stated.⁶

*Homan v. Earle*⁷ is an important illustration of our general principle, both because of Chief Justice Church's lucid exposition of the law and the delicate shading of the facts. Here a woman, evidently without reproach, had been led into a marriage engagement by a man whose conduct seems to have been purposely ambiguous. As the court observed, both parties to the suit were highly respectable, belonging to the same church; equals, except in pecuniary resources; the plaintiff about thirty, and the defendant fifty. The defendant, left a widower, began his visits soon after the death of his first wife, to the plaintiff, who had been her intimate friend. His visits grew longer and more frequent; there were rides and walks, caresses, and the usual endearing words. He gave the woman to understand that his wife had said something in her favor before she died. He spoke significantly of intending to marry when the year was out, of taking a wife of a certain description which she answered, of expecting her to know some day all his business. She cautioned him, after he had gone on in this way for two months, that she considered this meant a great deal, and at the same time she offered him his freedom. This warning only made him press his suit the more ardently, though he was far from making himself explicit. But, coming to her after a few days' absence, he made, as she testified, a formal declaration of love, which she reciprocated. The two were then separated for six weeks, after which the visits went on, during a brief season, much as before. By this time, however, a curious proceeding on the man's part leaves us to infer that he had begun courting another woman, with whom he had lately become acquainted, and whom, in fact, he married about six months afterwards. Drafting a letter one day with his own hand to the effect that the plaintiff regarded his visits as evidence of friendship, and "nothing more," he persuaded her to copy and sign it. He wished this, he told her, because he did not want others to think they had any understanding together so soon after his wife's death. The defendant's conduct, when his new engagement came out, indicated that he was conscious of having wronged the plaintiff. The court refused to disturb a verdict rendered for the woman on these facts, notwithstanding "negative evidence," such as the absence of presents, a ring, letters, and definite plans of marriage.

It is the settled modern rule that it is not necessary that a contract to marry should have been expressed by any set form of words, but it is sufficient if the conduct and language of the parties were such as clearly to indicate a mutual engagement and understanding to marry.⁸

Both offer and acceptance must be proved,⁹ and it is enough where it appears that the minds of the parties have met, although no express promise in language can be shown if it appears by the conduct of the parties that they both understood they were engaged.¹⁰

Where the seduction of the plaintiff is not alleged to enhance the damages, evidence of illicit intercourse is not admissible, where this intercourse has been kept secret,¹¹ but such evidence is admissible where a man has held out a woman as his wife, as this has a tendency at least to show that he had promised to marry her.¹² § 1277. Promises to Marry as Affected by the Statute of Frauds.

Treating promises to marry like all other contracts, we find old authorities assuming that where the contract is not to be performed within a year, it is void under the Statute of Frauds, unless expressed in writing. Thus, if A, in January, 1880, promises to marry B in February, 1881, B cannot feel sure that the engagement binds, unless the promise is put in black and white.¹³

A contract of marriage where no time is fixed is presumed not to be intended to be performed more than a year after its making, and therefore does not fall within the Statute of Frauds requiring a promise not to be performed within a year to be in writing.¹⁴ If the promise is not to be performed within a year, then it must be in writing within the Statute of Frauds,¹⁵ according to the most recent authority. But some incline to construe the statute so as not to affect promises to marry, but promises in consideration of marriage, such as marriage settlements.¹⁶ Where A promises to marry B within thirteen months, two years, &c., such a promise does not come under the statute at all, for it is capable of being performed within a year, and that is enough.¹⁷ An agreement to marry may commonly be regarded as a continuing contract by mutual consent, and hence unaffected by the statute.

§ 1278. Conditional Agreement.

A contract to marry on the occurrence of an event is valid,¹⁸ and a promise of marriage conditioned on the death of another is not void as an incitement to crime.¹⁹

§ 1279. Promise Conditioned on Pregnancy.

Under a statute making the seduction of an infant female a misdemeanor, no seduction takes place where the defendant suggests to the complaining witness sexual intercourse, and she says she is afraid something will happen, and she then obtains from him a promise to marry her if she becomes pregnant and then has intercourse with him.

The authorities are clear in this country that a promise of marriage conditioned on pregnancy, without other wiles or artifices, is a mere matter of barter. Such a promise has no tendency to overcome the natural sentiment of virtue and purity of a decent girl. The object of the statutes is to protect the chaste virgin against betrayal from an honest belief in the betrayer's protestations of love and affection, or a present unqualified promise of marriage, or a present unqualified promise of marriage as an inducement for the commission of the act. They are not intended as a shield for a lascivious barter and sale of chastity either by a corrupt consideration or upon a promise of marriage contingent upon the possibility of pregnancy, which would at most be remote to the minds of the parties engaging in the immoral transaction.²⁰ § 1280. Whether Promise to Divorced Woman Is to Unmarried Female.

There is conflict of authority as to whether a divorced woman is within the terms of a statute punishing the seduction of an "unmarried female." The Virginia rule is that since a divorced woman has necessarily had experience in the lecherous ways of men she is immune from their wiles and does not need the protection of the law, and therefore that the phrase an "unmarried female" means a woman who has never been married.²¹ What seems, however, to be the better view is that held in Oregon,²² that the spirit of the law does not take into consideration the wisdom and experience of those whom it undertakes to protect from wrong, and that the law is intended for the protection of the chaste widow just as much as for that of the woman who has never been a wife.

§ 1281. Both Sexes May Sue.

In practice, it is found that the suit for breach of promise is almost exclusively a woman's weapon; not, we may imagine, because those light perfidies are wholly on the man's part, nor necessarily because, when injured, he feels his humiliation less, but rather on account of sexual differences of temperament and disposition, affecting the methods of resentment. If the promise to marry does not bind one of two adults, neither, on principle, ought it to bind the other; the consent is in fact reciprocal and obligatory;²³ and hence the right to sue for breach is against the party who breaks the promise, of whichever sex this may be. Harrison v. Cage is an English case of William III's time, where the discarded lover actually sued his false mistress, and won a verdict; and this strange reversal of the sexes in the face of justice did not deter the court from declaring unanimously that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment.²⁴ § 1282. Contracts by Infants, Lunatics, etc.

Insanity at the time of passing the promise is of course a good defence, but only because inconsistent with the idea of mutual assent; and former insanity could not be alleged in justification of the breach.²⁵

The usual contract rules apply as to the competency of parties. A lunatic's promise to marry would not bind that party. Nor does a minor's, unless the minor ratifies the engagement on reaching majority. And here we may observe that the age at which a marriage binds a male or female is one thing, and the age of majority for the marriage promise another, the considerations of policy applying quite differently.²⁶ An English statute requires more than a ratification, to wit, a new and distinct contract, in order to bind an infant on his promise after he has come of age; and this statute covers promises to marry.²⁷

§ 1284. Construction.

A contract to marry generally without fixing the time implies an agreement to marry within a reasonable time,³⁵ but a definite statement of the time of marriage by an engaged person may be construed as a new and independent promise.³⁶ Where the parties agree to marry in accordance with the customs of a particular religion such customs become part of the marriage contract.³⁷ § 1285. Rescission or Modification.

A mutual release from a marriage engagement is the true way for parties to get rid of it; they who enter into such a promise mutually have mutually the power to rescind. But such a release must have been fairly and honorably procured in order to avail the party who sets it up.³⁸ The man or woman who breaks off an engagement discharges the other party; but the latter has the option of treating this as a breach, and making it the foundation of a suit for damages. Release of the promise, like the promise itself, may usually be by word of mouth.³⁹ An offer to release the other from his engagement acted on will operate to rescind the contract,⁴⁰ but mere forgiveness for breaking an engagement is not enough.⁴¹

Bad faith or misconduct by one of the parties which would not justify a divorce may justify the refusal of the other to enter into the marriage,⁴² and one may rescind a marriage contract on discovering that the other party to it is a person of immoral character,⁴³ but a man cannot break an engagement simply because his betrothed allows him to have illicit intercourse with her, as he cannot take advantage of his own wrong.⁴⁴

Postponement on account of the illness of the woman modifies the contract and imposes on the man the duty to wait a reasonable time before terminating the engagement.⁴⁵ § 1286. Performance and Breach.

A contract to marry, though evidenced by promises at different times, is but a single contract and a breach thereof is but one breach,⁴⁶ and the place of performance of a marriage contract is not merely the place of solemnization of the ceremony but the place where the parties are to be domiciled.⁴⁷

If a person engaged to marry B marries C instead, such party puts it out of his or her power to fulfil the former engagement, and B may sue at once for breach of promise.⁴⁸ If, again, the wedding with B was set for a certain day, and A inexcusably fails to appear, B, who was ready, may treat the contract as broken. And modern precedents, moreover, both in England and the United States, favor the rule that a breach of contract arises upon a positive refusal to perform, although the time specified for performance has not yet arrived. Hence, where parties had engaged to marry "in the fall," fixing no day, and the man in October announced his determination not to perform the contract, it was held that the woman might bring her action immediately.⁴⁹

An engagement binds, even though no precise time be fixed for the marriage; for here the law presumes that a reasonable time shall elapse. And the reasonable time having elapsed, and one party inexcusably neglecting or refusing to fulfil the engagement, while the other requests marriage, and alleges readiness, the latter is amply justified in breaking off the match, and likewise, as it would appear, in suing the delinquent party.⁵⁰ The declaration ought in strictness to aver according to the promise; where the promise was conditional, or to marry within a certain period or at a certain date, the allegation and proof should be accordingly;⁵¹ and if to marry within a reasonable time or on request, the declaration should correspond.⁵² But courts are not always strict as to pleadings and proof in this respect.⁵³

Failure to perform at the time fixed will amount to a breach,⁵⁴ but a mere postponement for reasonable cause does not.⁵⁵

§ 1287. Contracts by Married Persons Void.

If there is any one thing that a woman clearly understands it is that a man who is already married is not at liberty to take her to wife. The thought of making a marriage under such circumstances is a moral sin, while the passionate compact to do so when opportunity shall occur not only places the promising parties in a most perilous relation towards one another, but doubly exposes the conjugal party, whose rights obstruct their inclination, to wanton and wicked sacrifice. Hence a contract of marriage by two persons, one of whom is known by the other to be married to a third party, is void,⁵⁷ and when resting for its basic consideration on the securing of a divorce is against public policy and therefore wholly void.⁵⁸

A contract to marry made while one of the parties is already married is void⁵⁹ though a suit for divorce is then pending,⁶⁰ or where the husband and wife have been separated a long time⁶¹ or have lost track of each other.⁶² But an agreement to marry made while one of the parties has been divorced, but before the time has expired within which the decree has forbidden his remarriage, is valid when the new marriage is not to take place till the expiration of the period.⁶³ Therefore subsequent evidence that the successful plaintiff in a suit for breach of promise of marriage was a married woman when she brought her action is ample reason for reversal on appeal.⁶⁴

But guilty complicity is what excludes the plaintiff, and hence one may doubtless sue for breach of promise if ignorant at the time of the engagement that the defendant was already married.⁶⁵ In Tennessee this reservation has been indulged to a grave latitude. A married man courted a young woman who supposed him single, offering himself by letter. She accepted in form, whereupon he confided to her at once in his next epistle that he had a wife then living, from whom he expected to procure a divorce on getting certain papers passed. Instead of repudiating the contract, inquiring into the affair for herself, or keeping in reserve, as a woman should, she encouraged his love, pressing him fervently to hurry up those papers. He could not procure the divorce, because he had no grounds for one; and then she sued him for his breach of promise. The plaintiff was an intelligent and well-educated person. And yet it was held that, not being in pari delicto, she could maintain her action upon the offer she had accepted while supposing him single, and that her subsequent knowledge of his marriage could only be set up in diminution of damages.⁶⁶

So according to the weight of authority an action for breach of promise will lie although the defendant was at the time married, if the plaintiff was ignorant of that fact when the promise was made, on the ground of estoppel,⁶⁷ and the same result is reached although the plaintiff learns of the defendant's marriage and still remains willing to carry out the contract on the defendant's securing his release.⁶⁸

Although a promise to marry may be void when first made by one already married, still the promisor is liable when the promise is renewed after the divorce, after the former wife had married again and when there was no obstacle to prevent a remarriage,⁶⁹ and an agreement by a married person to marry another may be ratified on removal of the disability.⁷⁰ And where a party forbidden by a divorce decree to marry enters into an engagement to marry within the prohibited period the contract is not void where there was no engagement to marry within the period and the engagement lasted till the expiration of the period and was so ratified.⁷¹

§ 1288. Interference of a Third Party.

The courts have yielded principle to practical considerations in case a third party induces one to break a promise of marriage, even though the third party acts maliciously and wrongfully and uses threats and false representations. There seems no reason why the rule should be different in such cases from that in other cases of wrongful interference with a contractual relation, but the courts have been moved by the consideration that "The right of engaged parties to ask the advice of their friends and the right of the friends to give advice have never been denied. To hold that a third party may be subject to answer in damages for advising or inducing an engaged person to break the engagement might result in a suit by every disappointed lover against his successful rival. The State has an interest in the marriage relation, and until the marriage is solemnized no domestic rights exist and therefore cannot be violated." A loss of a marriage may be such a special injury as will support an action of slander or slander or libel, where the party was induced to break off the engagement by false and damaging charges not actionable per se, but otherwise there can be no action.⁷² No action will even lie at suit of an engaged man for debauching his betrothed, seducing her and alienating her affections, and thus interfering with a marriage contract then subsisting between them.⁷³ § 1289. Offer and Refusal as Precedent to Action.

There must be in some form before action brought an offer by the plaintiff to marry and a refusal by the defendant,⁷⁴ but the plaintiff need make no offer or request after the defendant has refused to perform either expressly,⁷⁵ or where his conduct shows a refusal.⁷⁶

On principle, some tender should precede all such common-law suits; and the plaintiff (due allowance being made for the natural modesty of the sex) ought to allege and prove an offer and refusal. Readiness, however, is held to be enough on a woman's part, since it is for the man ducere uxorem.⁷⁷ And where the defendant has incapacitated himself from fulfilment by marrying another, such allegation of request may be dispensed with.⁷⁸

An offer of marriage after breach is ordinarily no defence,⁷⁹ though if made before action brought it may be shown in mitigation of damages,⁸⁰ and a conditional offer after breach is no defence,⁸¹ but an offer after suit brought is no defence.⁸²

A bona fide offer of marriage made by the defendant before plaintiff has signified her intention to end the matter will be a defence,⁸³ but where the male defendant delays for five years fulfilling his promise, and then in the evening offers to marry the plaintiff at once when he could not get a license that evening, and goes away and never does get a license, and where the plaintiff subsequently refuses to marry him, the questions are for the jury whether the defendant's offer was made in good faith and whether the plaintiff's rejection was made in good faith, and whether it put an end to the contract. The defendant's offer of marriage, if made after rejection, is no defence. The defendant's offer is not a defence unless made in good faith, and unless also the plaintiff has not signified an intention to regard the contract as at an end.⁸⁴

§ 1290. Defences in General.

The defendant's pre-engagement to another cannot avail against a suit for breach of promise, for this again would be alleging one's own wrong in exculpation;⁸⁵ and the plaintiff's pre-engagement, if offered by way of excuse, should be alleged as the plaintiff's fraud upon the defendant.⁸⁶ So where the defendant obtained a divorce to marry plaintiff he cannot attack the divorce as being fraudulent in defence of an action for a breach.⁸⁷

A settlement invalid as in restraint of marriage will not be a defence,⁸⁸ and an agreement by which a woman agrees, in consideration of employment, not to make any claim against the defendant, is void as immoral, and no defence to an action for breach of promise of marriage.⁸⁹

§ 1291. Incompatibility as Defence.

Breach of a promise to marry cannot be justified on the ground that the defendant felt convinced that the proposed marriage would not promote the plaintiff's happiness; that the engagement proved their incompatibility of tastes and temperament; that they failed to respect or love one another, and the like.⁹⁰ Morally speaking, these are excellent reasons for breaking off a match; but the offended party has, nevertheless, at the law, the right to a money recompense, and for the courts to hold otherwise would well-nigh abolish the action.

Though decisions are not copious, we perceive that the principle of defence is the same, whether man or woman be the defendant, some allowance being made of course for differences of sex, as between the weaker and stronger; that both parties are taken to be bound equally by a mutual promise to unite later in marriage; but that justifying cause of a breach may arise either out of matters antecedent to the engagement or matters pending its fulfilment, the discovery, for instance, of lewdness previous or subsequent to the interchange of promises. If one were prevented by act of God from performing the contract, the usual rule of contracts would seem to apply, though, as we shall see, no such action is permitted to survive against personal representatives.⁹¹ Fault is taken especially into consideration in such suits; and even where a plea is inadequate as a defence, it may, nevertheless, be available to the defendant in mitigation of damages.

§ 1292. Illness or Incapacity.

That either of the parties (or both) is sick, infirm, incapable of breeding or procreation, or has led an immoral life, is not on principle a fatal obstacle to marriage, if the parties choose to take one another upon that understanding; nor is a bona fide contract for damaged goods less capable of enforcement per se than one for goods that are sound.

Plaintiff's illness may, however, be a defence,⁹² especially where it makes marriage impossible,⁹³ unless the defendant knew of the disease at the time he made his promise,⁹⁴ and it is a good defence that plaintiff has voluntarily submitted to an unnecessary surgical operation whereby she became incapable of procreation.⁹⁵

So in an action by a woman for breach of promise of marriage where it appeared that the original promise was made when the plaintiff was in sound health, and subsequently she became ill from kidney trouble and had two operations, and the defendant waited for her to recover for three years, at the end of which time she had not recovered, he is no longer bound to marry her. The court holds that the defendant agreed to marry a healthy woman and not an invalid, and that ill health is a defence to such an action as this. When the postponements were made to allow her time to recover this constituted a modification of the original contract and imposed upon the defendant the duty of waiting a reasonable length of time, and the jury should be instructed that if he waited a reasonable length of time and the plaintiff had not then recovered, he had a perfect right to withdraw from the engagement.⁹⁶

A breach of contract to marry does not appear where the defence is that the defendant is afflicted with an infectious disease, and the ground of decision is that it would be contrary to public policy to hold that one should marry where there is danger of communicating disease to the other party or transmitting it to the offspring.⁹⁷ But where the only defence is that the defendant is so ill that marriage would be dangerous for him, and probably shorten his life, the better opinion is that this is no defence.⁹⁸ The fact that one cannot use what he has agreed to take is no defence in an action on an ordinary contract, and it seems there is no distinction in a contract to marry.

Hence, we apprehend, physical incapacity on the part of the man, or want of chastity on the part of the woman, may be, but is not necessarily, a defence; and, while the deceived woman might plead the one, or the deceived man the other, to justify breaking off the match, neither party can be permitted to set up his or her own physical incapacity or want of chastity to defeat the suit.⁹⁹ It is held that under a statute which pronounces the marriage of a person incurably impotent absolutely void, a breach of such a person's promise to marry constitutes no cause of action.¹ Why an impotent person's promise could not be relied upon as a ground of damages by the other, who was misled into the match without fault, we know not.²

§ 1293. Immorality as Defence.

A man, ignorant of a woman's immoral character at the time of the engagement, can break off the match upon finding it out, or if she prove unchaste subsequently.³ This presupposes that he is not at fault; for if he has seduced her, or had carnal intercourse with her, or even condoned her fornication with others, he cannot set up her misconduct in defence,⁴ but mere immodest and indecent conduct of the woman before engagement is not a defence.⁵

Upon corresponding principles a woman can break off a match because she has ascertained that the man is of immoral character,⁶ or because he treated her, during the engagement, in a brutal and violent manner.⁷

§ 1294. Fraud.

A promise to marry procured by fraudulent representation or concealment as to past life and circumstances would be a good defence;⁸ our law in this respect applying the caveat emptor less rigidly, doubtless, than in the consummation of a marriage; and if the plaintiff at the time of the engagement knew that she was physically disqualified to contract marriage, and concealed such facts from the other party, this amounts to a fraud which prevents recovery.⁹

It is the rule in Massachusetts, however, that it is not the duty of a person before making an engagement to marry to communicate all the circumstances of his past life to the other party, and the parties will be bound if they enter into the contract without investigation or receiving assurances even though matters are subsequently discovered which would have prevented an engagement unless they are such as give the other party a right to terminate the contract upon their discovery.¹⁰

That one of the parties obtained money from the other by fraud is a defence,¹¹ and a woman's promise to marry made in pursuance of a scheme to obtain the confidence of another and his money is a false pretence when made with no intention of marrying, and she is liable under the "Confidence Game" statute.¹² § 1295. Time to Sue and Limitations.

The statute of limitations runs from the time of the breach,¹³ and where no time for performance of a marriage contract is fixed it is presumed to be performed within a reasonable time, and suit may be brought after the lapse of a reasonable time,¹⁴ but the statute does not begin to run until a refusal to marry.¹⁵

15. Crossett v. Brackett (N. H.), 105 A. 5.

Where a promise of marriage is followed by cohabitation for nineteen years the right of action for refusal to marry is not barred by limitations, has been recently held in New Hampshire. The court remarks:

"After the promise has been made, it is the right of either party to demand performance, and if the demand be reasonable in point of time, etc., a refusal to comply therewith is a breach of the contract, and a cause of action arises. But until such a demand is made and insisted upon, the contract continues in force, unless abandoned by agreement of the parties, or disavowed by one of them.

" 'Before a right of action accrues for the breach of a marriage contract, it must be averred and proved that the contract has been repudiated, and such repudiation must be shown by the acts, words, conduct or deed of the party who so repudiates it, and to be without sufficient reason or cause. There must be a refusal to marry or a repudiation in some way of the contract.' (Walters v. Stockberger, 20 Ind. App. 277, 50 N. E. 763.)

"The reasons which induce one of the parties to refrain from demanding present performance of the agreement are immaterial. If the question were whether the agreement to postpone for a fixed time were itself a binding contract, so that until the time had elapsed neither could demand performance, the question of the legality of the consideration for it would be presented. But no such question arises upon the evidence in

Where the defendant declares he will not carry out his promise to marry, suit can be brought upon it at once, although the time within which it was to have been performed has not expired.¹⁶ Statutory provisions that no acknowledgment or promise is sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract to take the case out of the operation of the Statute of Limitations unless in writing have no reference to repeated promises of marriage.¹⁷

§ 1296. Abatement on Death.

It is now settled in England that an action for breach of promise of marriage will not survive the death of the defendant even though special damage is alleged, as in a recent English case,¹⁸ notwithstanding dicta in earlier cases that an action might survive this case. The plaintiff does not rely upon such promise to make out her cause of action. The evidence of their relations and negotiations is material to the plaintiff's case merely to show that the original promise to marry had not been abandoned.

"The original promise and the ultimate refusal to perform being shown, it was incumbent upon the defendant to excuse or justify the refusal. The mere fact that there had been no disavowal or abandonment at an earlier date was sufficient for the plaintiff's purposes, and proving that failure to disavow was induced by illegal acts in which both participated would not show that there was a disavowal.

"Since the cause of action arose at the time of breach and not when the original promise was made, the action was seasonably brought. The plaintiff's evidence was that there was no breach until shortly before suit was begun. It is of no consequence that she might have made and insisted upon a demand for performance at a much earlier date. It is not the right to demand performance, nor even the demand which creates the right to sue, but the refusal to comply with the demand, or the disavowal of the contract when no demand is made. If the defendant had desired to terminate the contract at an earlier date, he could have done so at any time. As he did not do so, he cannot claim the protection of the Statute of Limitations. He is sued for breaking the contract, not for making it. The nonsuit was properly denied." Crossett v. Brackett (N. H.), 105 A. 5.

in case of special damage. The action was held to abate even though it was alleged the plaintiff had given up a profitable millinery business in consequence of the defendant's promise. This decision illustrates the modern tendency of the courts to discourage actions for breach of promise as much as possible.

In this country an action for breach of promise to marry will not lie against the personal representative of a deceased promisor, where no special damages are alleged and proved; ¹⁹ a rule which might seem to regard the tortious rather than contract aspect of such suits, whereby the breach becomes a personal injury, but which, perhaps, aims rather to make death good cause for non-fulfilment, regardless of damage to the other party. There is authority in this country, however, that the defendant's death does not abate the action.²⁰

As to the damages allowable in actions for breach of promise, the general principle is that of compensating the aggrieved party for the loss sustained in consequence of the non-fulfilment of a contract. And yet, from the nature of the case, such damages are not easily liquidated, and a jury must exercise great latitude of discretion, according to the circumstances, just as in actions founded on a tort. The plaintiff's avoidance of a marriage without affection might in reality be esteemed a gain rather than a loss. But the law does not so reason; it allows the prospective money value or worldly advantage of the marriage which is lost to be taken into the estimate of damages; and, moreover, the injury to the plaintiff's affections, the mortification, and the distress of mind consequent upon breaking off the match.²¹

21. Berry v. Da Costa, L. R. 1 C. P.

Though the action is one in contract the damages are not determined in principle, as in actions of contract, but rather as in tort,²³ and the jury in fixing the damages should consider all the facts and circumstances,²³ and all damages proximately resulting from the breach,²⁴ including satisfaction for the services rendered in reliance on such promise,²⁵ and that the plaintiff had lived with the defendant in reliance on a marriage ceremony which was void.²⁶

The loss of time and the reasonable expenses incurred in preparation for marriage are grounds of damage not special, but directly incidental to the breach of promise, and hence the length of the engagement and the progress made towards a fixed wedding-day may have a material bearing upon the amount to be awarded.²⁷

The jury may take into consideration the plaintiff's loss of opportunity during her engagement for contracting a suitable marriage with another,²⁸ but not the fact the plaintiff had broken an § 1298. Seduction, etc., in Aggravation of Damages.

In suits where the woman is plaintiff, damages are heavily aggravated in case she appears to have been seduced upon faith of the engagement; and here the defendant becomes assessed in fact chiefly by way of exemplary damages for debauching his betrothed.⁴³ According to the great weight of authority a woman who has been seduced by means of a promise of marriage can recover, in a suit for breach of the promise, damages for the seduction by way of aggravation. This is on the theory that she cannot recover the full damage caused by the breach of the promise unless permitted to show all the circumstances contributing to the distress of mind, which is an acknowledged element of her damage,⁴⁴ but even in States following this rule the evidence is limited to the seduction, and further evidence cannot be given of additional damages from the fact that the plaintiff became pregnant or suffered a miscarriage, or became sick therefrom.⁴⁵

On the other hand, it is argued that at common law a woman cannot recover damages for her seduction because she is a consenting party to the wrongful act, and to permit her to show the seduction in aggravation of the damages sustained from the breach of the promise is to permit her to recover indirectly what the law has emphatically and consistently forbidden her to recover.⁴⁶

actions for breach of promise in aggravation of damages there is some conflict of authority as to whether the seduction must be specially pleaded. The better rule seems to be that seduction should be specially pleaded as being special damages not the natural and usual result of the acts complained of, and as giving the defendant full notice of what he has to meet.⁴⁷

That the plaintiff contracted a venereal disease from the defendant may not be shown in aggravation,⁴⁸ and it is not an aggravation of damages that the defendant induced the plaintiff to marry another.⁴⁹

A woman's good name is so sacredly guarded by our law that where the male defendant to an action for breach of promise makes wanton, malicious, or reckless allegation in defence that the plaintiff is unchaste, having no reason to believe such allegation true, his failure to exhibit the fact in proof may be taken in aggravation of the damages.⁵⁰

§ 1299. Punitive Damages.

In some States exemplary damages may be awarded when the defendant has been guilty of fraud or evil motives⁵¹ or seduction.⁵²

Punitive damages in an action for breach of promise of marriage are awarded upon like grounds as in actions of tort in some States, and the authorities have since a very early date generally treated the action as one carrying with it as to damages the elements of a tort. In a State where by statute punitive damages are limited to cases where the defendant has been guilty of malice, fraud or oppression, it is error to allow the jury to give punitive damages where a mere failure to carry out the agreement appears.⁵³ But the jury may not award punitive damages on account of the defendant's setting up the defence that the plaintiff was epileptic unless this defence was set up maliciously.⁵⁴

§ 1300. Mitigation of Damages.

The conditions of the parties known to both are properly considered in mitigation of damages.⁵⁵ In mitigation of damages for breach of promise to marry may be shown the plaintiff's dissolute habits and character, drunkenness, incontinence, and the like, such as to unfit that party for companionship in married life,⁵⁶ and undesirable traits of the plaintiff which are not a defence to her action may still be shown in mitigation of damages.⁵⁷

Evidence of specific immodest acts by the plaintiff before her engagement are not admissible in mitigation of damages,⁵⁸ but evidence of illicit intercourse by the plaintiff with other men is admissible,⁵⁹ but not illicit intercourse between the parties,⁶⁰ or mutual improprieties and lewdness together.⁶¹

Whatever shows, too, that the plaintiff viewed the proposed marriage in a spirit not befitting the relation, and inconsistent with a purpose to fulfil its objects faithfully — as, for instance, admissions that the defendant's proposals were accepted to spite others, or only for the sake of his money — is competent for the same purpose.⁶² And as to such admissions on the plaintiff's part, the material question is, not when they were made, but what they tended to prove,⁶³ and whether they indicated the true state of the plaintiff's feelings while the engagement itself subsisted. The defendant's incurable disease may also be shown in mitigation of damages;⁶⁴ and so, probably, his physical impotence or imbecility of mind. The defendant may rebut any testimony of high social position or wealth;⁶⁵ and, in short, introduce evidence on his part which may tend to reduce the damages, whether by way of exculpating himself, throwing the blame upon the plaintiff, or simply showing that the pecuniary loss to the latter through the failure of the match is less than represented.

The defendant cannot show that there was insanity in the plaintiff's family when he knew that at the time he made the promise,⁶⁶ or that the mother of the plaintiff was a prostitute.⁶⁷

The jury may, when the circumstances warrant, take into consideration in assessing damages proof of an offer to renew and perform made prior to the beginning of a suit on the breach,⁶⁸ but damages cannot be mitigated by an offer to renew and perform after suit brought. It is clearly against the well-established general principle that evidence of facts occurring after the beginning of suit cannot be given in aggravation or mitigation of damages.⁶⁹ § 1301. Concluding Observations Upon the Action for Breach of Promise.

It is perceived that this action for breach of promise is anomalous; founded, theoretically, upon the law of contract; and yet, in respect of damages and certain other points, seeming to be grounded rather in tort. The aggravation of damages for seduction or for assailing the woman's good name in the pleadings partakes manifestly of the action in tort, and, in general, the damages in a suit for breach of promise to marry are of that punitive, vague, unliquidated character which we associate with remedies for private wrongs; all statements as to placing the injured party where he or she would have been with the contract fulfilled being quite inappropriate, and the main issue resolving itself into a computation of mental anguish and losses of opportunity, such as arithmetic cannot figure out with exactness. For mitigation of these damages, for defence generally, the effort at present quite frequent is to recriminate, as in divorce suits, the sexual relations giving more complexion to the legal proceedings than any mere agreement, as between A and B, to do a certain thing. In truth, the contract to marry, under our modern civilized rule of courtship, which regards the woman's word and will in a betrothment, instead of leaving her for a parent to dispose of, brings a contracting pair of opposite sexes into a certain close relation known as an engagement—a relation preliminary and probationary, as it were, with reference to marriage, and yet distinct. There is a contract to enter hereafter into a status; but there is an intermediate status created, meanwhile, which it is mutually understood shall influence the fulfilment of that contract. Hence we find, when suit is brought for breach of promise, matter of justification set up at one time with reference to the circumstances and terms of the contract; at another, with regard to misbehavior connected with the engagement. Thus is perceived the difficulty of treating the breach of promise to enter into closer sexual relations like a simple breach of contract at common law, where parties undertake, as between man and man, and apart from love and sentiment, to do a certain thing in the future.

§ 1302. Doubtful Policy of Such Actions.

On the whole, we may question whether this right to sue for breach of promise is not productive of more evil than good. It is admitted that only one sex makes practical use of such a remedy, though its logical application should be mutual; and of that sex, moreover, but few of the finer grained. It is admitted, too, that the marriage state ought not to be lightly entered into; that it involves the profoundest interests of human life, transmitting its complex influences direct to posterity, and invading the happiness of parents and near kindred; that the step once taken is well-nigh irrevocable. From such a standpoint we view the marriage engagement substantially as a period of probation for both parties — their opportunity for finding one another out; and if that probation results in developing incompatibility of tastes and temperament, coldness, suspicion, an incurable repugnance of one to the other, though all this may impute no vice to either, nor afford matter for judicial demonstration, duty requires that the match be broken off. What, then, shall be the consequence to the party who conscientiously takes the initiative? Analyze our reported breach of promise cases, and we shall see that the fair plaintiff is frail on the point most essential to womanly self-respect, in the majority of instances: that she has unwisely granted to her lover the indulgences of a husband; or that she was a soiled dove when he offered himself; or, more brazen still, that she has been loose with other men while plighted in affection. That the man's virtue, in such cases, will usually bear comparison, we need not contend, since in practice it is not he that invites litigation. In the interests of morality, then, and for the sake of compensating the innocent few who complete this record,⁷⁰ and whose vows, moreover, were made in a befitting spirit,⁷¹ should so much festering corruption be yearly exposed to a jesting community, under the misnomer of a blighted affection, and jealousy exact her blackmail? Are the fallen victims of passion to represent the victims of exalted love? Courts have found it necessary, of late, to insist emphatically that a man is not bound by a contract to marry a lewd woman which he entered into in ignorance of her character.⁷² This stricture, however, by no means debars all the lewd women from suing for breach of promise, nor even all the impenitent.⁷³ And however honorably one may have acquitted himself of an imprudent engagement before its consummation, the right which is conceded him by law, of showing a justification by way of mitigating damages, does not cover the case; for, letting alone the difficulty of proof, most men would rather pay hush-money than have the whole story of a love-folly trumpeted in the newspapers.

Seduction furnishes another, and, properly speaking, quite a distinct case from the loss of a marriage opportunity. For this offence, so revolting to every instinct of manly honor, a moral and physical wrong, accompanied by social degradation, renders it proper that the victim should have some right of action. For the common law and the common sense of mankind unite in treating the man as more culpable than the woman in such a case, and the woman as more grievously ruined than the man. But instead of taking seduction as the time-honored appendage to breach of promise and other collateral suits,⁷⁴ it seems fitter, as some of our States now provide by law, to make seduction a distinct and independent ground of action.⁷⁵ Where, too, a man, whether under promise to marry or not, gets a woman with child, she should have some sort of legal recourse for the child's sake, if not her own. In this latter case, and, indeed, in the former, a criminal magistrate will feel that the law does its best when, by a judicious exercise of influence, he can prevail upon the guilty pair, no impediment existing, to unite in marriage.

§ 1303. Actions Growing in Disfavor.

Actions for breach of promise of marriage are growing in disfavor with the courts, as they are recognized as a frequent exercise of blackmail, as claims are often made by designing women of the world where no promise has been made or where some promise has been induced by experienced women from inexperienced men. In either case it is well known that most men will pay something rather than face the ignominy of a trial, and suits are brought for this purpose by such women, while the sort of women who are really entitled to recover will as a general rule never bring their troubles before the court. A good example of the feeling of the courts is a recent Maine case, where a verdict of $116,000 was set aside on appeal because the plaintiff's evidence was incredible.⁷⁶⁻⁷⁷

§ 1304. Separation in General.

Separation is that anomalous condition of a married pair which involves a cessation of domestic intercourse while the impediments of marriage continue. Either from choice or necessity, as the case may be, they throw aside the strong safeguards of a home and mutual companionship; they forfeit their most solemn obligations to protect, love, and cherish through life; they continue united in form and divided in fact. The spirit of the contract, all that dignifies and ennobles it, is gone; but the letter remains. Both parties submit, in some degree, at least, to the degradation of public scandal; they are cast loose upon the world without the right to love and be loved again; the thought of kindling fresh flames at the altar of domestic happiness is criminal; and deprived of the comfort and support of one another, finding in society at best but timid sympathy and consolation, the moral character must be strong, and doubly so must be that of the wife, that each may buffet with success the tide which bears onward to destruction. Such a state of things no public policy can safely favor; but the law sometimes permits it, if for no other reason than that an adequate remedy is wanting to check or to prevent the evil; and hence it may be thought more expedient for the courts to enforce such mutual contracts of the unhappy pair as mitigate their troubles, than to dabble in a domestic quarrel and try to compel unwilling companionships.

This we conceive to be the rightful position of the English and American equity courts whenever they see fit to enforce separation agreements. Some, to be sure, are disposed to carry the argument further: Thus, recent English writers of much repute refer to the fact that divorces from bed and board are often granted in that country, and hence conclude that it is reasonable for the married parties themselves to compromise litigation, save court fees, and avoid public notoriety, and therefore to agree to live apart, just as though the court had entered a decree for that purpose.⁷⁸ But this argument proves too much; for if marriage and divorce are matters for private compromise, like ordinary contracts, why should not the discontented pair, upon just cause, agree to unloose the yoke altogether? Why should they not sometimes obtain divorce from the bonds of matrimony by collusion and default, and thus take the readiest means of avoiding scandalous and expensive suits? One shrinks from such conclusions. In fact, divorce laws do not belong to the parties themselves, but to the public; government guards the sanctity of marriage, just as it demands the duty of allegiance; only that perhaps its policy cannot be enforced in the one case as well as the other. It is because marriage is not on the footing of ordinary contracts, that husband and wife cannot, on principle, compromise, arbitrate, or modify their relationship at pleasure. Furthermore, the above argument would seem to suggest that where a complete divorce, instead of divorce from bed and board, is attainable, deeds of separation would not hold good; nor, again, where parties separate for causes which do not even justify divorce from bed and board; neither of which positions is sustained by the actual decisions.

78. Macq. Hus. & Wife, 324 et seq. See also Jacob n. to Roper Hus. & Wife, 277; Peachey Mar. Settl. 647.

§ 1305. Separation Deeds; Their History in England.

Lord Eldon was of the opinion that a settlement by way of separate maintenance, on a voluntary separation of husband and wife, was against the policy of the law and void. The ground of his opinion was that such settlements, creating a separate maintenance by voluntary agreement between husband and wife, were in their consequences destructive to the indissoluble nature and the sanctity of the marriage contract; and he considered the question to be the gravest and most momentous to the public interest that could fall under discussion in a court of justice.⁷⁹ But in England final and complete dissolution of marriage was, until modern times, attainable only by act of Parliament. And this method of procedure was found so difficult, expensive, and uncertain, that parties who could not live peaceably together were led to consider some lesser means of mitigating their misfortune. To be sure, the ecclesiastical courts awarded sentences of divorce from bed and board; but these merely discharged the parties from the duty of cohabitation, permitting them to come together afterwards if they should so choose; and therefore, as a writer observes, these sentences "did not often, it must be owned, repay the pains bestowed in obtaining them."⁸⁰ The English ecclesiastical courts steadily refused, moreover, to recognize separation deeds.⁸¹ Such a policy seems, however, to have turned husband and wife to their own devices for effecting the same result, with less delay and annoyance, and in order to adjust more completely those property arrangements which never could be forgotten in their misery. Deeds of settlement, trusts, and the intervention of the equity courts, readily furnished a plan of operations; and the ubiquitous conveyancer appeared once more upon the stage to open the way, through subtle refinements, to freedom for discontented couples, and emolument for himself.

After a prolonged struggle, and in spite of public policy, it is therefore fully established at length in England, as a doctrine of equity, that deeds of separation may and must, if properly framed, be carried into execution by the courts.⁸² They may be enforced in the common-law courts indirectly through the medium of covenants which are entered into between the husband and trustees; and in equity specific performance will be decreed where the stipulations are not contrary to law nor in contravention of public policy.⁸³ An agreement between husband and wife to live apart is perhaps void as against public policy; but the husband's covenant with a third party may be valid and binding, although it originates in this unauthorized state of separation and relates directly to it.⁸⁴

It may seem strange that such an auxiliary agreement should be enforced, while the principal agreement is held contrary to the spirit and policy of the law. Lord Eldon, who strongly opposed the whole doctrine on principle, said that if the question were res integra, untouched by dictum or decision, he would not have permitted such a covenant to be the foundation of a suit in equity.⁸⁵ Sir William Grant appears to have been the first to call attention to the inconsistency of the courts in this respect; and his remark has come down through the later judges.⁸⁶ Lord Rosslyn, however, hit upon the explanation that an agreement for a separate provision between the husband and wife alone is void, merely from the general incapacity of the wife to contract:⁸⁷ an explanation which, we submit, is quite unsatisfactory. The true reason for the anomalous distinction appears to be simply this: that contracts for separation are in general void as against public policy, but that the courts saw fit to let in exceptions so far as to enforce fair covenants.

§ 1306. Separation Deeds in the United States.

Deeds of separation were never very common in the United States. And there are at least three very good reasons why they should be at this day less encouraged than in England. The first is that our legislation strongly favors the separate control of married women as to their own acquisitions, without the intervention of trustees and formal deeds of settlement, thus dispensing with the necessity of intricate property arrangements. The second is that equity, ecclesiastical, and common-law functions are usually blended in the same courts of final appeal, so that a State is at liberty to adopt the precedents of the ecclesiastical rather than the modern equity tribunals of England for its guidance; while an American court, on the other hand, could not admit clearly the right of parties to declare terms of private separation, without bringing confusion and uncertainty upon its own divorce and matrimonial jurisdiction. The third is that sentences of divorce have been procured in most of the United States with great ease, moderate expense, and little publicity.

Early in this century, Chancellor Kent summed up authorities which showed that a private separation was an illegal contract, in these emphatic words: "Nothing can be clearer or more sound than this conjugal doctrine."⁸⁸

In this country agreements between the spouses to live apart are generally regarded as void as against public policy,⁸⁹ but they are sustained in England;⁹⁰ but even there a wife may obtain a divorce for desertion notwithstanding a separation agreement where the husband runs off with another woman.⁹¹

Nevertheless there are individual American cases, and numerous ones, where separation deeds have been recognized so far as to permit and sometimes to require parties to perform such marital duties as were incumbent upon them, notwithstanding the fact of separation.⁹² And the text-writer must still further concede, however reluctantly, that out of a regard for permitting married parties who are resolved upon separation without a divorce to arrange decently for the maintenance of wife and offspring, and for a just mutual disposition of property rights, our courts are in the latest cases following the English lead so as to sustain the enforcement of whatever covenants might be pronounced fair in themselves on behalf of parties separated or about to separate. Some of these cases sustain such covenants upon a suggestion that, separation being inevitable, they are prepared to make the best of it, not conceding the support of contracts calculated to favor a separation which has not yet taken place or been fully decided upon.⁹³ An unsatisfactory distinction truly, nor one likely to afford a resting place; as though this half countenance were not calculated of itself to favor future separation; and yet a legal distinction. It seems to stop short of enforcing specific performance of a written agreement for a separation deed, and to refuse direct countenance to a stipulation that husband and wife shall live apart in time to come.

§ 1307. Same Subject; Intervention of Trustees.

An indenture with the intervention of a trustee or trustees is in this country held the safer sort of instrument where separation is contemplated, and such are the deeds usually drawn and construed by our courts. It is desirable that the husband and trustee mutually covenant together. But so considerably are husband and wife now emancipated from the need of intermediate parties, that a fair transaction of the present nature has been sometimes sustained in certain States, where no trustee at all was interposed.⁹⁴ This cannot be affirmed of all, nor of most of the United States;⁹⁵ nor can such a contract ever prevail against the wife's interests where she, in such negotiation and arrangements, does not appear to have acted with perfect freedom and a perfect understanding of her individual rights.⁹⁶ Sometimes an agreement or bond to separate is executed by husband and wife, accompanied by the conveyance of property to a trustee for the use of the wife; which latter, however, is the instrument the court construes and upholds.⁹⁷

Husband and wife may make a valid contract of separation in the District of Columbia without the intervention of a trustee under the Code.⁹⁸

§ 1308. Property Rights During Separation.

Where the husband has the possession of a farm of which his wife holds the legal title, it is a question of fact whether he holds as her tenant or as her agent. If the husband and wife have separated and the husband continues to manage her farm, and if there is no evidence that he is her agent, the only conclusion which can be reached is that he occupied as her tenant, and no other contract being shown, it must be held that he occupied as tenant at will. As such he may maintain trespass against a third party who enters and takes the crops.⁹⁹ § 1309. Separation Deeds; What Provisions Are Supported.

Inasmuch, then, as separation deeds are not enforced either in England or the United States, at the present day, without regard to the policy of stipulations or covenants in question, the limit of judicial support may be drawn at the support of provisions which, supposing separation inevitable, carry the fulfilment of conjugal duties and rights after a reasonable and becoming manner into that relation. For equity can only sanction what is fair and beneficial; and here cognizance is taken, not of the separation, but of circumstances and a settlement attending that state. The covenant or stipulation itself, the whole settlement, must be free from exception and such as equity might, under other instances of its jurisdiction, have sustained.¹ Where, therefore, the provision is for the benefit of wife and children, as in providing suitable maintenance during the separation, such a covenant or stipulation is to be highly favored.² Where an equitable and suitable division of the property is made, whose benefits have been enjoyed during the coverture, this, too, may well be upheld.³ The spouse who covenants to deliver up certain property to the other should make that covenant as advantageous to the latter as was reasonably intended.⁴

It is fair that a husband's covenant or stipulation of proper allowance for the wife's support should be accompanied by the trustee's covenant or stipulation of indemnity against his wife's debts.⁵

In respect of directly compelling the married parties to live apart under their agreement, separation deeds cannot be pronounced good upon any just conception of public policy and the divorce laws. The language of Lord Brougham in Warrender v. Warrender is emphatic on this point.⁶ American cases are to the same purport;⁷ and especially must this rule hold true where the compulsion sought is under circumstances of separation not justifying a divorce.

§ 1310. Whether Separation Deeds Bar Divorce Proceedings; Effect of a Spouse's Guilt.

There is a general opinion, founded in sound policy, that articles of separation are no bar to proceedings for divorce for subsequent cause, as if one of the parties, after their execution, should commit adultery.⁸ Nor, as held in Maryland, does a separation deed bar proceedings for divorce for impotency, which, properly speaking, is a cause accruing before the separation took place.⁹ The discovery, after the execution of a deed of separation, that a spouse had been previously guilty of adultery, moreover, would not debar the innocent spouse from claiming rights of which that spouse had been kept in ignorance.¹⁰

Nor should a deed of separation be so construed as to deprive one spouse from returning to defend a suit for divorce brought by the other.¹¹ If separation deeds should ever become, with judicial sanction, permissive of conjugal unfaithfulness, and obstructive of the usual remedies of an injured spouse, recognized by the legislature, bigamy and adultery will have gained a firm bulwark in the community.

It is held, and probably out of favor to a wife who is thus deprived of the shield to her honor she most needs, that a settlement, unqualified in terms, made by the husband to a trustee for the use of his wife, on the execution of articles of separation between them, will not be set aside on her subsequent adultery while living apart from him,¹² nor even though for that adultery

he finally procured a divorce.¹³ Any provision for maintenance under a separation deed is, as we have elsewhere seen,¹⁴ now considered in England a provision in full of the wife's necessities; and the wife cannot, even though needy, pledge her husband's credit further, independently of his permission.¹⁵

But adultery of the one, and cause for divorce to the other, may put a new face upon this matter of maintenance. And it is held in England that the separated wife, having discovered that her husband had been guilty of incestuous adultery, and having obtained a decree for divorce on that ground, was entitled to the usual order for permanent alimony; and this, notwithstanding that under the separation deed she agreed to accept certain sums as a provision for her support, and not to sue her husband for any further maintenance.¹⁶ For all such deeds should be construed in the light of the status originally contemplated.

It is in this country an implied condition of a separation agreement under which a husband is to pay the wife's support that she shall remain chaste, and her adultery is a defence to an action for these payments.¹⁷ The English rule is that the adultery of the wife while living apart from the husband under a separation agreement does not prevent her from recovering the payments stipulated to her by that agreement unless the agreement states specifically that she shall remain chaste.¹⁸ The reason for this rule seems to be that in England the framing of such agreements is by custom in the hands of skilled solicitors who use forms providing for the chastity of the wife as one of the conditions of the payments, and the courts have taken the stand that the omission of haps be considered fraudulent inducement to the conveyance.

this clause is clear evidence that the parties did not intend the payments to be governed by any such condition.¹⁹ § 1311. Legal and Illegal Conditions in Separation Deeds; Remedies.

The potential mingling of legal and illegal conditions in these agreements, with the view of entering upon a status which of itself is inconsistent with a due fulfilment of the moral and legal duties of matrimony, occasions judicial confusion, which is more likely to increase than decrease while separation deeds are judicially recognized. But it is held in England that if some covenants in such a deed are legal and proper, while others are not, the former are enforceable by themselves.²⁰ And trifling breaches on the part of one spouse have moreover been sometimes disregarded, in order that the main purposes of the compact might be executed against another spouse whose fault it was that the separation became originally resolved upon.²¹

In New York it is held that a husband and trustee having mutually covenanted under a separation deed, the latter may bring an action alone for the former's breach. But in such an action all facts by way of inducement should be stated in the complaint; and simply to set forth the agreement, and declare a breach of it for failure to pay, is not good pleading.²² § 1312. Effect of Reconciliation on Separation Deeds, or Failure to Separate.

Should the separated parties come together after a separation under articles, the consideration of those articles fails, and an immediate end is put to them;²³ supposing, of course, that the reconciliation is genuine, and not a pretext by the one spouse in order to deprive the other of legal rights.²⁴ And reconciliation taking place, the subsequent abandonment of one spouse by the other will not revive those articles.²⁵ But it is held that such deeds may distinctly provide that the articles shall continue in operation should the parties ever resume cohabitation; in which case it will not be suspended during, at all events, what proves only a temporary reconciliation.²⁶

Where no separation actually took place, the deed of separation is wholly void.²⁷

It is frequently said that reconciliation and resumption of the marital relation will render a separation contract void, but this is a loose and inaccurate statement. The truth is that having entered into a valid separation agreement the courts cannot and will not deem such contract avoided, unless the conduct of the parties impels to the conclusion that they themselves so regarded it. When the contract contains provisions for the wife which might with equal propriety have been made had no separation been contemplated, and others which would have otherwise been idle, the coming together again of the parties and their conduct may be such as to show an intention to avoid the latter and not the former. So where the agreement for separation includes a division of property which might have been made if no separation had taken place the reconciliation does not abrogate this division.²⁸

Where the parties have separated due to the fault of one, and they become reconciled under an agreement that in case the guilty party gives further cause for divorce he shall pay a certain sum to the other, this contract is valid. It is not an inducement to sep-

A bond by a husband to a wife by way of compromise of matrimonial difficulties binding the husband to renew his matrimonial obligations and live with and support his wife and family is based on a sufficient consideration, and is not forbidden by public policy.³⁰ § 1313. English Doctrine Upholds Separation Deeds.

While in many parts of the United States is seen an increasing tendency to adopt the English theory concerning separation covenants, with, however, more looseness as to the form such transactions shall take, the latest English cases quite transcend the distinctions behind which our courts take refuge, and the earlier dicta of their own Eldon and Brougham. Divorce being there regarded with less favor than in the United States, notwithstanding the late statutes on the subject, trust deeds and voluntary separation are upon mature experience treated as, on the whole, the more decent and respectable method for unhappy couples to adopt, than that somewhat novel recourse to courts, which brings a scandalous cause into public controversy.³¹ English policy, indeed, in its inception

Where the parties are living apart an agreement is valid which provides for a fixed sum per week to be paid to the wife on reconciliation, and, further, that if they separate again on account of the husband's wrongdoing, he shall pay for her comfortable maintenance, as this is not an agreement to separate and will be enforced where the wife does actually leave the husband later on account of

A modern text-writer of England alluding to the new divorce acts of 20 & 21 Vict., ch. 85, 21 & 22, Vict., ch. 108, which extend the facilities of legal separation upon the American plan, admits that under those statutes "a more effectual separation can be obtained than under a simple deed or agreement to live apart." But, as he proceeds to observe, deeds of separation may yet be preferred, since they are available is quite different from American in this regard, a fact which American jurists should bear well in mind. And under legislation of date much later than the divorce acts which were copied from the United States, separation deeds are plainly legalized.³² § 1314. Custody of Offspring Under Modern English Separation Deeds.

Thus, the custody of the offspring may now be distinctly provided for, as it would appear, in an English deed of separation. But at the same time chancery, where the child is made a ward of the court, will protect the child's welfare.

There is a recent case in point which attracted much attention from the public relations of the parents. The father was a clergyman of the Church of England; the mother an atheist; and separation was caused by the latter spouse's peculiar religious and social opinions. The separated mother afterwards wrote and published a book of an obscene character (so the court held), among other things recommending checks on the increase of population. The daughter was to be left with the mother, under the separation deed, for eleven months of the year; but, besides offending by this publication, the mother refused to let the child receive a religious education. Accordingly a next friend of the infant removed the daughter from the mother's custody, and had her made a ward of the court, when she was about eight years old. The Court of Chancery held that to bring the child up in her father's religion was a duty, and that the authorship of the obscene book was good reason, under the circumstances, for removing the child from the mother's custody.³³ Nor was such removal of the child from her mother's custody considered a suable breach of the for purposes which do not justify a legal grant of separation; so, too, "even in those instances in which the court affords relief, many, if not most persons, will prefer quietly arranging their differences by deed to painful discussions in a public court of justice." Peachey Mar. Settl. 647, 648.

husband's covenant, in this case, notwithstanding the friend of the infant removed her with the father's concurrence.³⁴ § 1315. Effect of Separation Deeds on Rights in Divorce.

On sound principles, as we have contended, a separation deed ought not to debar the separated parties from procuring a divorce, or legal separation, upon sufficient cause duly arising. American courts certainly shrink from recognizing anything like a private right by mutual consent to relax the marriage ties or dissolve the marriage compact.³⁵ But where, in the instance just noticed, the husband had enforced the separation deed for the purposes of separation, and the wife set up by counterclaim that she was entitled to a judicial separation, chancery ruled that the wife was barred by lapse of time and the deed of separation from doing so.³⁶

Where husband and wife make a valid agreement for separation and the support of the wife by the husband as long as both shall live, this can only be rescinded by mutual agreement or by express adjudication in a proper proceeding. The mere allowance of temporary or permanent alimony in the absence of an express adjudication respecting the contract would not affect its subsequent validity. Implied adjudication affecting the agreement will not be presumed from the silence of the decree on the subject of alimony.³⁷

Married persons may agree to live separate and apart from each other, because it is their privilege to live in that manner so long as they mutually desire to do so, and the husband's agreement to support his wife during that period of time is in harmony with his lawful duty; but an agreement of separation cannot confer on either party the right to live away from the other against the will of the other. By policy of the law the period for which they thus contract touching their separation is limited to the period of their future mutual assent to live apart. Accordingly, in the absence of wrongdoing on the husband's part, he may require his wife's return to his bed and board, and her refusal will not only constitute her an obstinate deserter, but will deny to her any right to support from him, notwithstanding the existence of an agreement wherein they have mutually stipulated to live apart.³⁸

§ 1316. English Suit for Restitution of Conjugal Rights; Whether Separation Deed Bars.

Upon still another point, namely, the restitution of conjugal rights, the English chancery has, of late, departed widely from its earlier precedents. In Great Britain, where this suit for restitution of conjugal rights has always been permitted, it was formerly ruled in the matrimonial courts, and seemed to be the well-settled doctrine, that a deed of separation afforded no bar to such a suit whenever either party chose to enforce the remedy; and this, even though the deed in terms forbade such proceedings.³⁹ This was in accordance with the first idea that separation deeds should indirectly be tolerated for their beneficial covenants as concerned parties bent upon separation, but not directly upheld. That rule has changed; for, as the English statute now provides, a deed of separation which contains a covenant forbidding the suit for restitution of conjugal rights to be brought will bar such a suit.⁴⁰ And to one separated spouse chancery will now grant an injunction, by virtue of such a covenant, to restrain the other spouse from suing for restitution of conjugal rights.⁴¹ Compromise, too, of Hunt*, De G. F. & J. 221, 225, it appears that a decree of the English Master of the Rolls was reversed by the Lord Chancellor in favor of such a doctrine as that stated in the the suit for restitution of conjugal rights, is permitted in England.⁴²

There is this fundamental distinction between the English suit for divorce or judicial separation, and the suit for restitution of conjugal rights: that in the former instance the chief object is to free the petitioner in whole or in part from the marriage obligations; but in the latter to control the other spouse so as to compel once more an unwilling cohabitation.⁴³ Restitution of conjugal rights is a remedy unknown in the United States, where courts may finally part, but cannot forcibly reunite, the separated spouses.

§ 1317. Latest English Rule as to Specific Performance of Covenants to Separate.

A modern English chancery court will furthermore enforce specific performance of a written agreement for a separation deed made between husband and an interested third person, such as his wife's father. It is not probable that such a rule obtains in any part of the United States; and certainly no such decisions to that effect are to be found.⁴⁴ § 1318. Rights of One Separated Spouse upon the Decease of the Other.

The doctrine of election has been applied to rights accruing under a deed of separation. Thus, where the husband covenanted to pay a fixed annual allowance to his separated wife, and subsequently, by will, gave her precisely the same allowance thus settled upon her, and died before her, it was held that she, as his widow, could not receive both sums, but must elect between the allowance payable under the will and that under the deed.⁴⁵

On the death of a wife living apart from her husband under a deed of separation, administration can be taken on her estate, and assets are recoverable by the legally appointed administrator, even though it be from the husband himself, in order that her debts be paid.⁴⁶ Dower and curtesy are not barred, as a rule, by separation; but by certain statutes, where husband and wife have involuntarily separated, or the wife willingly lives apart from the husband or in adultery, and no subsequent reconciliation takes place, the widow cannot claim dower in her deceased husband's lands.⁴⁷

§ 1319. Separate Support; Nature of Action.

There is a sort of equitable relief which courts afford to a married woman who lives apart from her husband because of his fault. This is known as the wife's separate maintenance. Local statute extends this relief, which is of chancery origin, and gives it a scope in these days correspondent to our married women's legislation. Where a wife, for instance, has been forced to leave her husband because of his misconduct, she may come into equity to have secured to her a fair proportion of the rents and profits from land acquired by her since marriage and in his possession;⁴⁸ or she may procure the aid of a court of equity in getting possession of such chattels as she may have contributed to the furnishing and adornment of the home.⁴⁹ In general, if a wife is abandoned by her husband, or refused cohabitation, without fault on her part, and being left without adequate means of support, a bill in equity will lie to compel the husband to support her, without asking for or procuring a decree of divorce.⁵⁰ § 1320. Separate Support; Venue of Action.

The venue of a suit for maintenance without divorce is in no wise controlled by the statute in relation to jurisdiction in divorce suits. The place of suit is governed by the laws applying to ordinary suits for the vindication of legal or equitable rights. The divorce statutes do not relate to an independent suit for maintenance and cannot control it.⁵¹

§ 1321. Separate Support; Fault of Parties.

Whatever the mode or extent of relief thus afforded, the rule is that the wife will not be entitled to a decree of maintenance unless she can make out a case which would have justified a decree of judicial separation.⁵²

Where the wife fails to prove her complaint in an action for separate support the court has no right to award her the custody of the children or to make a decree for their support. It would be an anomaly to allow a complainant who had failed to establish a claim to the principal relief sought to have a decree for the mere incidents of that relief. Otherwise, whenever a wife fails in her application for divorce she would have a right to separate maintenance. To return to her husband may involve some humiliation, but the defeated wife took that chance when she went into court and made charges against her husband which she was unable to sustain. She has the assurance that if she returns and does her part he must do his, or the law will grant her relief.⁵³

53. Towson v. Towson (D. C. App.), 47 Wash. Law Rep. 345.

But a statute authorizing the court to make orders for the support of the wife and children although separation is not decreed gives the court the right to make orders for support even though no facts are proved which entitle the parties to a divorce or separation, where they are actually living apart. The court remarks that "The children are not responsible for the unfortunate differences which have caused the estrangement and separation of the parents and ought not to suffer therefrom. Their rights do not depend on the degree of culpability of one or the other parent and their needs must be provided for whether the existing conditions have been brought about by the fault of one or the other or of both parents."⁵⁴ It is not enough that the separation was voluntary and by mutual assent,⁵⁵ or produced by the wife's own departure without sufficient cause. Nor can condoned misconduct of the husband be made the basis of her procedure.⁵⁶

Statutes provide more specific separate relief to a married woman living apart from her husband "without her fault,"⁵⁷ or where she is "deserted by" her husband; it may be sometimes by way of temporary alimony, or again of the beneficial use of property he has left behind him.⁵⁸

A petition for separate maintenance will not be granted where it appears that the separation was the fault of both parties, as the wife to prevail must come into court with clean hands and prove that she has not by her own fault caused the separation. So where the separation was in part caused by the ill temper and constant nagging of the wife she will not be granted separate maintenance.⁵⁹

on her petition even though her adultery has been condoned so that the husband has been refused a divorce.⁶⁰ But adultery by the wife with the collusion or consent of the husband is not such justifiable cause as relieves him from the duty of supporting her, and she may maintain a bill for support and maintenance against him. The husband cannot claim that her adultery is justifiable cause for relieving him from his duty when he has consented to it.⁶¹ § 1322. Separate Support; Financial Ability of Parties.

The fact that the wife is not dependent on the husband for support is no bar to an action by her for non-support. To sustain such a defence would be to acquit those wrongdoers who may have married women with parents able to support them and to convict those wrongdoers who may have married women whose parents are poor.⁶²

Under a statute requiring a man to support his family "according to his means" it is enough to show that he was a skilled workman able to earn fair wages had he been so disposed. It is not necessary for the complainant to show that he had actually been in receipt of money while absent from her, as "means" refers to the capacity to earn money as well as to property actually owned and possessed. This makes out a prima facie case, and the way is then open for the defendant to show that by reason of ill-health or inability to obtain employment he had been unable to earn money and to contribute to the support of his wife and child.⁶³

§ 1323. Separate Support; Alimony Pendente Lite.

Alimony pendente lite is not properly allowed the wife who applies for separate maintenance.⁶⁴ But in some States, as inci-

The court has also a right to make provision for future support, and the court's decree in amount should be measured by the means of the defendant as well as by the requirements of the plaintiff, and by all general rules usually governing in the granting of permanent alimony in divorce decrees, including such injunctive relief against alienation of property to defeat the objects to be attained by the action as the court may, on showing consider necessary.⁶⁵

§ 1324. Separate Support; Property Rights.

The savings of money transmitted from time to time by a husband to his wife from whom he was living separate, for her maintenance and support, are held in equity to be her separate estate.⁶⁶

An injunction will not be issued at suit of a wife for separate maintenance to enjoin the husband and his brother, who has certain personal property of the husband, from disposing of it, even though the husband is a drunkard and likely to dissipate it. The proper remedy is by proceedings for the appointment of a conservator. A husband cannot be enjoined from selling or disposing of his personal property at suit of his wife except in the ordinary course of business to insure payment of alimony allowed the wife. The limit of the power of the court to secure payment of alimony is to § 1325. Vexatious Prosecutions for Non-Support Enjoined.

Although it is the general rule that equity will not enjoin a criminal prosecution, still there are certain exceptions to this rule, and one is to be noted in a case where a young couple had separated and the father of the wife started a series of criminal prosecutions against the husband for non-support under a statute which had already been declared unconstitutional. The court remarks: "If there be no precedent for the interference of a court of chancery in such a case it is time one should be made. Certainly the relief sought falls within the general scope of those equitable principles which entitle a citizen to protection against multiplied, repeated and vexatious suits."⁶⁸

ABANDONMENT.

§ 1326. Effect on Civil Rights of Wife.

Abandonment by either spouse consists in leaving the other wilfully and with the intention of causing their perpetual separation. As to the right of the wife, when abandoned by her husband, to earn, contract, sue, and be sued, to much the same effect as a feme sole, while such abandonment actually lasts, the current of American authority, legislative and judicial alike, decidedly favors so just a doctrine.⁶⁹ Modern Married Women's Acts, as we have seen, often permit the wife to do quite or nearly as much when not abandoned at all. And in England statutes secure to a married woman privileges to a similar extent under like circumstances of abandonment.⁷⁰ The test is, observes an American

Misc. 99, the deserting husband's rights are excluded in the wife's separate property even after her death. And see the numerous statutes in almost every State in the Union, enlarging the rights of married women in such cases. The rule would not extend to suits for partition of lands held by husband and wife as tenants in common. McDermott v. French, 2 McCart. 78.

70. See Stat. 20 & 21 Vict., ch. 85; Midland R. R. Co. v. Pye, 10 C. B. (N. S.) 179. Chancery has long moulded its proceedings to secure a case, whether the husband may be deemed to have renounced his marital rights and relations.⁷¹

The great contrariety of current legislation is a great obstruction, however, to formulating a decided rule of English and American jurisprudence on this point. We have seen that, under the old common-law doctrine of coverture, the wife could not sue or be sued, or otherwise act as a single woman, unless the husband was under the disability of a civil death, which meant originally banishment and abjuration of the realm. The wife's rights being enlarged by statute under such circumstances, we have therefore to inquire into the scope of any statute in point. Some of our local acts are construed as affording a substitute for the common-law rule, and not as merely cumulative, and hence require a literal interpretation.⁷² In general such legislation is to be considered as grafted upon the common law of coverture which prevailed when this country was settled, and at the Revolution. It contemplates abandonment, and not what might be designed as a merely temporary withdrawal from cohabitation; and it regards the husband in general as completely out of the jurisdiction of the State, never having entered it, or else having forsaken it.⁷³

v. Galvin, 49 Cal. 34. The confinement of her husband in an insane asylum in another State may enlarge a wife's right of suit. Gustin v. Carpenter, 51 Vt. 585. A wife who is decreed a feme sole trader may convey her real estate by her sole deed. Wilson v. Coursin, 72 Pa. St. 306. See King v. Thompson, 87 Pa. St. 365. Or be sued alone as to her separate estate. Winternitz v. Porter, 86 Pa. St. 35. And see Cocke v. Garrett, 7 Baxt. 360. The absconding of her husband does not charge the wife as a wrong-doer with reference to property left on the premises before she has taken some affirmative action. Campbell v. Quackenbush, 33 Mich.

As for "civil death," we have nothing in the United States which precisely corresponds to the old English sense; abjuration of the realm being altogether obsolete, and banishment or transportation being known in England, but not in the United States.⁷⁴ The courts, themselves, upon the suggestion of analogies, have extended the principle which permits wives living apart from their husbands to sue and be sued as feme sole in exceptional instances. Thus the husband's transportation for a term of years has been treated in England as a proper case for admitting the wife to this independent condition;⁷⁵ also where he becomes an alien enemy;⁷⁶ in neither of which instances, it will be observed, is the husband's disability necessarily permanent, but only an absolute one while it lasts. Lord Mansfield extended the exception much further, allowing a wife who lived apart from her husband upon a separate maintenance to contract, sue, and be sued as a feme sole, even to the extent of charging her new husband with an unsettled claim thus arising.⁷⁷ Lord Kenyon, more technical and inclined to the old order, overturned that rule;⁷⁸ and, accordingly, it became re-established that no action at law could be maintained against a married woman unless her husband had abjured the realm.⁷⁹ Equity, the doctrine of separate estate, and Married Women's Acts, change once more the direction of the decisions in these later times. Under the English statutes there is a judicial record, so to speak, of the abandonment or desertion; a fair prerequisite not favored, apparently, under the Married Women's Acts of the United States.

287. Sole conveyance, upon privy examination, is provided in some States in cases of abandonment. Leonard v. Mason, 1 Lea, 384. If she lives apart from her husband, her separate property will be charged readily with debts contracted for her own benefit. Johnson v. Cummins, 1 C. E. Green, 97. § 1327. Crime at Common Law and Under Statutes.

At common law it was not a criminal offence for a husband to leave his wife without means of support,⁸¹ but modern statutes have quite generally provided that such act becomes a criminal offence and is punishable as such.⁸²

80. See Nicholson v. Drury Buildings Co., L. R. 7 Ch. D. 48. But similar proceedings obtain in some States. Rooker v. Rooker, 60 Ind. 550; Blake v. Nelson, 29 La. Ann. 245.

82. State v. Weyant, 149 Ia. 457, 128 N. W. 839 (wife destitute though not starving).

A proceeding under the act approved May 13, 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 155), providing that one who, without cause, abandons and neglects and refuses to provide for his wife is guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to fine and imprisonment, is criminal, notwithstanding the court has power to direct the fine to be paid to the wife. People v. Flury, 173 Ill. App. 640.

Under the act approved May 13, 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 155), making the offence of abandonment coupled with neglect and refusal to provide for the wife punishable criminally, the offence is not a continuing one. Id.

Both abandonment and non-support are essential, and mere proof of abandonment will not support conviction under Revisal 1905, § 3355, relating to willful abandonment without providing support. State v. Toney, 162 N. C. 635, 78 S. E. 156.

As used in the title to Laws 1913, ch. 6483, the word "desertion" has a broader meaning than mere physical separation. Welch v. State, 69 Fla. 21, 67 So. 224.

The statute making punishable the abandonment of a wife and minor child by a husband and father does not impose a penalty for temporary separation, but implies a purpose not to support his family, where there is no excuse for his failure to do so. Irving v. State (Tex. Cr. App.), 166 S. W. 1166.

A husband, who maintained his wife at the home of his father, and who induced her to leave there under the pretext of making a visit to her father, and who then clandestinely deserted her at a nearby town, leaving her without money and without a home and without providing for her future support, was guilty of wife abandonment. State v. Williams, 136 Mo. App. 304, 116 S. W. 1128; People v. Elbert, — Ill. —, 122 N. E. 816; State v. Lyons, — Mo. App. —, 207, S. W. 264 (state the complaint); Ex parte Turner, — Vt.

Though a married man forsakes his family, he is not absolved from the legal and moral obligation of supporting them. To the end, chiefly, that the deserted wife and children may not become a burden to the public, many States now subject the husband to a criminal prosecution for his neglect of marital duty. By giving bond, with proper surety, to furnish the needful support, such unfaithful spouse goes clear,⁸³ the punishment seldom extending to the simple abandonment.⁸⁴ § 1328. Constitutionality and Effect of Statutes.

Statutes making the abandonment of the wife a criminal offence have been universally upheld as being within the constitutional power of the legislature,⁸⁵ and being criminal in nature must be

83. Commonwealth v. Jones, 90 Pa. St. 431.

84. Under the New York act a husband cannot be convicted upon mere proof of abandonment; it must further be shown that the deserted wife has no adequate means of support, and is a burden on the public. People v. Walsh, 18 N. Y. Supr. 292.

85. Cr. Code 1912, § 697, making the abandonment of a wife and failure to support her without just cause a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment, held constitutional. State v. English, 101 S. C. 304, 85 S. E. 721, L. R. A. 1915F, 977; People v. Bos, 162 Ill. App. 454; Brand v. Brand, 253 Ill. 134, 96 N. E. 918; Green v. State, 96 Ark. 175, 131 S. W. 463.

Act May 13, 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 155), denouncing the crime of wife abandonment and providing that fines may be directed to be paid to the wife, or that the court may direct defendant to pay a weekly sum to the wife for one year, is not invalid. People v. Heise, 257 Ill. 443, 100 N. E. 1000.

Laws 1911, ch. 163, making it an offence for a husband to desert and omit to support his wife or children, is not unconstitutional in so far as it provides (section 4) for orders for periodical payments for the wife's benefit, or (section 7) relates to wages of one confined at hard labor. State v. Gillmore, 88 Kan. 835, 129 P. 1123.

Code Supp. 1907, § 4775a, providing that whoever shall without good cause willfully neglect to maintain or provide for his wife, she being in a destitute condition, or shall neglect and refuse to provide for his children, they being in a destitute condition, is as definite in setting forth the offence as in the nature of things seem possible, and the statute is not strictly construed,⁸⁶ and are not retroactive, but both the abandonment and the failure to support must have occurred since the taking effect of the statute.⁸⁷

The statutes apply only where the offence was committed within the State,⁸⁸ and it must appear that the husband knew that his wife was in the State.⁸⁹

wife after abandonment is no defence.⁵ The crime is committed although the husband and wife live separately by consent where he refuses to provide for her.⁶

It may not be abandonment where the parties separate by mutual consent,⁷ although the wife's sincere offer to return may constitute his refusal an abandonment.⁸

Where the husband treats the wife so cruelly that she leaves him, this is not a constructive abandonment of her by him to render him guilty of abandonment.⁹

It is no defence that the marriage was procured through the fraud of the wife,¹⁰ or that the marriage was made under duress by the wife, where no attempt to annul the marriage has been made.¹¹

It is usually no defence to the charge that the wife is after abandonment supported by others,¹² or that the wife's parents would, if called upon, support her;¹³ that a wife after abandonment supported herself.¹⁴ An offer to return and live with the wife is not a defence to a charge of abandonment,¹⁵ and a husband's offer to provide a home not made in good faith is not a defence,¹⁶ or that the wife refused after abandonment to take the husband back again.¹⁷ That the wife has released the husband from further support is no defence to a charge of abandonment,¹⁸ or that she was not dependent on him for support.¹⁹

It is not a defence that the wife was a prostitute before marriage,²⁰ or that the wife might have brought suit for divorce.²¹

A decree of divorce gives the husband immunity from prosecution for abandonment,²⁴ but a decree nisi is no defence,²⁵ and prosecution for the abandonment of one's wife cannot be defended on the plea that the husband's suit for divorce is pending.²⁶ A divorce obtained by the wife after desertion is no defence,²⁷ and a judgment for alimony may not be a defence to a prosecution for abandonment.²⁸

ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS.

SECTION 1332. Wife's Right of Action.

1333. Right of One Spouse to the Other's Society; Suit for Enticement.

1334. Proximate Cause.

§ 1332. Wife's Right of Action.

At common law a suit for a tort to the wife could not be brought by her alone on account of unity of husband and wife, but under a statute providing that a married woman may sue or be sued he need not be joined in an action by her against a third person for alienation of his affections. The court holds this to be a property right included in the statute. The old rule arose from the theory that the inferior had no property in the company of the superior, but the old rules of the common law, laid down centuries gone, making the wife the inferior, practically a slave, have become wholly distasteful to enlightened public sentiment and have "gone glimmering through the dream of things that were, the school boy's tale, the wonder of an hour."³⁰ So to-day the wife is universally allowed this right of action under modern statutes,³¹ and desertion of the wife by the husband may be a necessary element of her action.³² Under married women's statutes permitting her to recover for damages to her person or character or property, a married woman may recover in an action in her own name for the alienation of the affections of her husband.³³ The absurdity and cruel injustice of the common-law fiction of the identity of husband and wife have long been recognized, and the tendency of all modern legislation has been towards the emancipation of the wife. Our statutes clearly manifest the purpose to give her an action to enforce any legal right she may have or to secure redress for any actionable wrong inflicted upon her where the recovery would inure to her benefit.

The wife has a right to an action for the alienation of her husband's affections even though he does not literally abandon her, but is still living with her. Consortium means something more than mere physical presence in the home, and nothing could give the sensitive wife more anguish than the presence of a husband who is untrue to his marriage vows. The action is also not barred by the fact that the husband is more to be blamed than the defendant, or that the husband was estranged from the wife prior to the illicit relations with the defendant.³⁴ In an action by a woman for the alienation of her husband's affections evidence tending to show conduct on his part with other women than the defendant during this period such as to indicate little affection for the plaintiff is properly introduced in mitigation of damages.³⁵

Each spouse is entitled to the society and companionship of the other. Inasmuch as the husband is thus entitled, he may recover his wife from any person who would withhold or withdraw her from him. This is a well-understood principle the world over.³⁶ And the common law gives him the right to sue for damages all persons who seek to entice her away.³⁷

The gist of the action is the loss of consortium,³⁸ and it is not necessary to show sexual intercourse with the wife,³⁹ and the plaintiff must always prove a valid marriage.⁴⁰ Action for alienation may be brought although a ceremonial marriage was not physically consummated.⁴¹

The rights of the husband to sue for interference with his marital rights are not destroyed by the Married Women's Acts enlarging the property rights of married women,⁴² and the action is usually against the paramour alone,⁴³ the other spouse not being a necessary or proper party.⁴⁴

§ 1334. Proximate Cause.

As in other tort actions, it is necessary to prove that the defendant was the proximate and moving cause of the injury,⁴⁵ but it need not appear that the defendant was the sole cause of the separation.⁴⁶

Controlling Cause.—It was not necessary, to confer a right of action for alienation of affections, that defendant's conduct be the sole cause of the alienation or separation; it being sufficient if it was the controlling cause. Baird v. Carle, 157 Wis. 565, 147 N. W. 834; Lupton v. Underwood, — Del. Super. —, 85 A. 965; Sullivan v. Valiquette, — Colo. —, 180 P. 91; Linden v. McClintock, — Mo. App. —, 187 S. 46. Nevins v. Nevins, 68 Kan. 410, 75 P. 492.

relations with the defendant is not enough to show alienation, but some active interference by the defendant must be shown.⁴⁷

Where in an action for alienation the plaintiff claims that the husband left her on account of the language of the defendant, it is competent for the defendant to show in rebuttal statements the husband made just before he left to the effect that he was going on account of the plaintiff's infidelity as showing his intention. The husband cannot testify to conversations with his wife in which the plaintiff admitted her guilt, as this would be admitting conversations between husband and wife.⁴⁸

It must appear, where there are two defendants, that they both co-operated to cause the alienation,⁴⁹ and merely harboring the wife after abandonment will not constitute the alienation.⁵⁰ § 1335. Malice; Negligence; Interference by Relatives.

In an action for alienation of affections, where there is no element of seduction, the plaintiff must show malice to recover. Mere advice by the defendant given with an honest desire to assist is not enough,⁵¹ but the motives of the defendant are not important.⁵² It is well settled that either husband or wife, in order to recover damages from a third party for alienating the affections of the other, must show that such third party took an active and intentional part in causing the estrangement. Liability is imposed upon an intermeddler where he purposely and unjustifiably induces either husband or wife to abandon the other, but is not imposed upon him unless, by acts knowingly and intentionally committed for that purpose, he was the procuring cause of the separation. It is not enough to allege negligence. Therefore no recovery can be had against a detective company on the ground that the husband hired them to shadow his wife and that they negligently shadowed another woman and reported her immoral, thus causing the husband to falsely charge his wife with immorality, whereupon she left him and would not return.⁵³

In actions for enticement, malice and improper motive are always to be considered; and parents and near relatives stand on a different footing from strangers. So is the previous conduct of the husband towards his wife a material element to be considered; since this, and not the interference of others, may have occasioned the separation. It is one thing to actively promote domestic discord, but quite another to harbor from motives of kindness and humanity one who seeks shelter from the oppression of her own lawful protector.

Yet such conduct, whatever the motives, is, on the part of strangers, exceedingly perilous, generally open to misconstruction, and never to be encouraged. They should leave the parties to their lawful remedies against one another. With parents it is different. There are several cases in the American reports where a father is not only held to be absolved from liability for sheltering his daughter, who has fled from a drunken and profligate husband, but even stimulated to do so. "A father's house," says Chancellor Kent, "is always open to his children; and whether they be married or unmarried, it is still to them a refuge from evil and a consolation in distress. Natural affection establishes and consecrates this asylum,"⁵⁴ and parents of a son have the same right to advise him in good faith in regard to leaving his wife.⁵⁵ In a declaration in an action by a wife against her father-in-law for alienation of affections it is enough to charge malice without also alleging that the defendant's act was not actuated by parental solicitude for the welfare of the son. The plaintiff in such a case carries the burden of proof to overcome the presumption that the parent acted under the influence of natural affection and for what he believed to be for the good of the child.⁵⁶ In an action for alienation against the father of the spouse the measure of proof is greater than it would have been had he been a mere intermeddling stranger.⁵⁷ But this does not justify even a parent in hostile interference against the husband;⁵⁸ for the latter's rights are still superior; and the father must give up his daughter, and the marriage-offspring, whenever she wishes to return, unless the proper tribunal has decreed otherwise; though he might, we suppose, by fair arguments, urged to promote her true good, seek to dissuade her from returning. The legal doctrine seems to be this, that honest motives may shield a parent from the consequences of indiscretion, while adding nothing to the right of actual control; the intent with which the parent acted being the material point, rather than the justice of the interference; that a husband forfeits his right to sue others for enticement, where his own misconduct justified and actually caused the separation; but that otherwise his remedy is complete against all persons whomsoever who have lent their countenance to any scheme for breaking up his household.

A curious case of this sort came before the Supreme Court of North Carolina in 1849. The defendant had enticed away the wife of the plaintiff. The two afterwards entered into an agreement that the defendant should keep the plaintiff's wife and child at his own home, and should raise, educate, and provide for the child by appropriating the portion of property formerly intended for the mother's provision; that he should not be liable for having enticed the wife away; and that the plaintiff might visit his wife and child not exceeding four or five days at a time. The wife was not made a party to the contract, though it appeared to have been made with her approval. The plaintiff afterwards rescinded the agreement, demanded his wife, and, upon refusal of the defendant to give her up, sued him in damages. The court sustained him; pronouncing the contract to be "neither in form or substance a contract for a separation, but simply a license to harbor the wife and child, securing the defendant against any legal responsibility for so doing until withdrawn." And it was further intimated that such a contract was absolutely void as against public policy.⁵⁹

The parents of a husband are in the same way liable to the wife if they induce him to leave her.⁶⁰

ties going on unless he connived at them,⁶¹ but the consent of the injured spouse to the acts complained of is a bar to recovery.⁶²

It is a good defence to an action for alienation to show that the act of the spouse was voluntary and not due to any wrongful or intentional act of the defendant.⁶³

The consent of the wife to adultery is no defence to an action by the husband for alienation,⁶⁴ and it is no defence that there was an estrangement between the parties before the defendant appeared,⁶⁵ but the spouse cannot recover who has himself brought about the loss of affection by his conduct.⁶⁶ It is no defence that the plaintiff suffered no pecuniary loss.⁶⁷

§ 1337. Effect of Divorce.

A husband may recover for alienation of a wife's affections even though she has been previously awarded a divorce against him, and even though his application for divorce on the ground of abandonment was denied and hers was granted. Abandonment of a wife by a husband does not necessarily mean that her affections have not theretofore been alienated from him by other persons. The issue of abandonment in a divorce suit and the issue of alienation of affections between either of them and a third party in another and distinct case are in no sense akin to each other; and because the evidence in the two cases may be substantially the same is no reason why a judgment in one should be a bar to the other.⁶⁸ A statute providing that in all cases of divorce the guilty party shall forfeit all rights and claims under and by virtue of the marriage does not foreclose the husband against whom a divorce is granted from maintaining action against a third party for alienation of the wife's affections before the divorce was granted. The "rights and claims" referred to in the statute are rights and claims between husband and wife which spring up by reason of the marriage, and the statute has no reference whatever to the tortious act of a third party during the existence of the marriage relation.⁶⁹

Apart from the statute it is clear that a judgment for divorce, even at the husband's fault, is not a bar to an action of this kind. It is not strange that after discovering such acts of alienation the husband should permit the wife to obtain a divorce. It would be against public policy to permit the seducer of a wife to set up a disagreement or even a separation, between her and her husband, as a complete defence to an action by the latter for the wrong.⁷⁰

A divorce obtained by the wronged spouse is no defence to his action against a third party who alienated the affections of the spouse,⁷¹ and even a divorce obtained by the spouse whose affec-

A statute providing that divorces forfeits marriage rights may have the effect of preventing an action for alienation after divorce. Hamilton v. McNeill, 150 Ia. 470, 129 N. W. 480.

That one sued for alienating plaintiff's former wife's affections was not a party to a divorce decree granted her for plaintiff's fault does not preclude him from pleading the decree within Code, § 3181, which provides that a divorce decree shall forfeit all rights of the guilty party acquired by the marriage. Id.

tions were alienated is no defence to the action by the wronged spouse.⁷²

§ 1338. Sale of Drugs to Spouse.

At common law the wife had no right of action for wrongful interference with the marital relationship, and the only person deemed to be harmed by such interference was the head of the family. This was on the theory that the wife's personality was merged in the husband, but as by modern statutes this is changed, and the law now recognizes her legal equality with her husband, the reasoning of the common law no longer applies. Therefore, where the husband has been a victim of drugs, and had reformed, and the wife notified the defendant of this and asked him not to sell drugs to her husband, and the defendant did sell the husband drugs, as a consequence of which he again became addicted to them, the wife may recover for the loss of his consortium. The court remarks that the husband was no longer a free agent, as his will had become so weakened, and that the sale was the proximate cause of his downfall. The defendant must have known that just so sure as he sold the husband the poison he would inject it into his veins. The defendant must be held to have contemplated the natural and probable result of his own acts purposely committed. The right of the wife to consortium is invaded. Consortium is defined to be the conjugal fellowship of husband and wife, and the right of each to the company, co-operation, and aid of the other in every conjugal relation. This right is invaded whenever a third person, through machination, enticement, seduction or other wrongful, intentional, and malicious interference with the marriage relation deprives the husband or wife of the consortium of the other.

Malice sufficiently appears from the sales under these conditions, and it is not necessary to show hatred or ill-will.⁷³

§ 1339. Damages.

Damages will not include damages for criminal conversation in an action for alienation only.⁷⁴

In a wife's action the damages should include loss of support, consortium and mental anguish,⁷⁵ including injuries inflicted on the plaintiff by the spouse on account of the defendant's conduct even though the defendant was not present at the time;⁷⁶ may not include the fact that the spouse made a will in favor of the defendant, as marital rights do not include the right to have a will made in favor of the spouse;⁷⁷ may consider the defendant's malice shown.⁷⁸

The prior estrangement of the married couple may be shown in mitigation of damages;⁷⁹ may show in mitigation that the plaintiff did not care for the spouse and had previously ill-treated her and been unfaithful;⁸⁰ that the erring spouse obtained a divorce may be pleaded in mitigation of damages,⁸¹ and in some States punitive damages may be awarded on showing malice,⁸² and in the federal courts exemplary damages are recoverable.⁸³ Substantial sums are commonly upheld,⁸⁴ but will be cut down when excessive.⁸⁵

In States where compensatory damages only are recoverable evidence of the defendant's wealth is inadmissible in an action for alienation of affections. Error in admitting such evidence is not cured by an instruction to the jury to disregard it where from the size of the verdict it is evident that such direction was not obeyed.⁸⁶ In an action for alienation of affections it is error to admit evidence that the defendant told the plaintiff's husband of her great wealth unless coupled with evidence that the defendant held out this great wealth as an inducement to the plaintiff's husband to leave his wife and marry her.⁸⁷

Damages should include anything happening up to the time of bringing suit.⁸⁸

CHAPTER V.

CRIMINAL CONVERSATION.

SECTION 1340. Right of Action.

1341. Defences.

§ 1340. Right of Action.

In a suit for alienation of affections it is essential for the plaintiff to show that the defendant produced and brought about the alienation of the affections of the wife if the suit is brought by the husband, or of the husband if the suit is brought by the wife. It is permissible to prove, not for the purpose of establishing the cause of action, but in aggravation of damages, sexual intercourse, although such conduct is not essential to recovery. On the contrary, in a suit for criminal conversation the exact reverse is true. The action will fail without the proof of seduction, and it is not necessary to maintain the action that there be any proof of alienation of affections.⁸⁹ The husband has a right of action against the assailant of his wife for rape. The fact that the wife also has a right of action does not bar the husband, and his right grows out of his marital relations with the person upon whom the wrong was committed.⁹⁰

Although the common-law rule prevented the wife from bringing an action for criminal conversation it is no longer applicable under modern statutes, and she may sue her husband's paramour.⁹¹

A husband or wife may settle his or her civil right of action for damages for criminal conversation with the spouse, but cannot settle a criminal prosecution for the wrong of the guilty spouse as such settlement would lead to intolerable abuses and is against public policy. Therefore a clause in an agreement of settlement of a claim for criminal conversation that the wronged person would do nothing to cause publicity of the crime is void, and a breach of it will give no right of action.⁹²

An action for criminal conversation may exist independent of a cause of action for alienation,⁹³ and in such an action proof of sexual intercourse is necessary, but evidence of alienation of affections is unnecessary.⁹⁴ The defilement of the marriage bed is the gist of the action,⁹⁵ but alienation of affections may be shown as enhancing the damages,⁹⁶ and the issue is whether adultery has been committed without the consent or connivance of the spouse.⁹⁷ A legal marriage must be shown.⁹⁸

§ 1341. Defences.

Connivance is a defence to the action, but the spouse may properly watch without being guilty of connivance.⁹⁹

It is no defence that the spouse had been previously guilty of immoral conduct with others,¹ and it is no defence that the wronged spouse has condoned the adultery.²

The adultery of the complaining spouse is not a defence to the action.³

§ 1342. Damages.

The measure of damages for debauching a wife is the value of the wife's services to the husband, her conjugal aid, society and comfort, less the value of the husband's obligation to support her,⁴ and the plaintiff's mental anguish and humiliation may also be considered,⁵ but the damages will be less where the husband has deserted the wife;⁶ and the fact that the plaintiff continued to cohabit with his wife after the seduction may be considered in mitigation of damages.⁷ The fact that the husband made an opportunity for his wife to commit adultery may be considered in mitigation of damages,⁸ and the wife's previous unchastity is a ground for mitigation of damages.⁹

The jury may in some States in their discretion award punitive damages.¹⁰ Alienation of affection may be pleaded in aggravation of damages.¹¹ § 1343. Husband's Freehold; by Marriage in Wife's Real Estate.

The surviving husband's rights in the real estate of his deceased wife remain to be noticed. The immediate effect of coverture at common law, as we have seen, is to invest the husband with the usufruct of all real estate owned by the wife at the time of her marriage, and of all such as may come to her during coverture; this usufruct being in the nature of a freehold, with beneficial enjoyment of rents and profits, and lasting, at all events, during their joint lives.¹² And, besides the rents and profits during coverture, the husband is entitled, as survivor, to all arrears accrued up to the time of his wife's death, together with the emblements or growing crops.¹³ § 1344. Husband's Enlarged Freehold as Tenant by the Curtesy.

But the husband at the common law may acquire, upon a certain condition, an enlarged life interest in his wife's lands, and in estates of inheritance of which she was seised in possession during coverture, so as to extend beyond her life if he survives her; in other words, he may be a tenant by the curtesy,¹⁴ taking a life estate in the property.¹⁵

Curtesy is a common-law right arising from the marriage relation,¹⁶ favored in the law.¹⁷ Tenancy by the curtesy, or tenancy by curtesy, is a freehold estate in the husband for the term of his natural life. He acquires it by the fact that a child capable of inheritance is born of the marriage. The meaning of the term is somewhat obscure. Some have thought the word "curtesy" signifies the favor or curtesy with which the law regards the husband. Others that it comes from the Latin word curtis, and has reference to the feudal custom which permitted the husband, as soon as a son was born, to attend court as one of the pares curiæ, and do homage without his wife. But there is reason to believe that tenancy by the curtesy existed in the civil law during the reign of Constantine.¹⁸

This privilege of the husband extends to all lands and tenements of which the wife was seised at any time during coverture, whether legal or trust estate, whether in fee-simple or by way of remainder or reversion.¹⁹ The common law affords herein a rare but positive instance of public policy discriminating in favor of a marriage accompanied by the propagation of children.

§ 1345. The Four Essentials of Curtesy at the Common Law.

Four things are essential, at common law, to entitle a husband to curtesy: First, A lawful marriage. Second, Seisin of the wife at some time during coverture. Third, Birth alive of issue capable of inheritance. Fourth, Death of the wife. After the birth of the child the husband's title to curtesy becomes possible; and the curtesy is then initiate. After the death of the wife the title to curtesy becomes complete; and the curtesy is then consummate.²⁰ For a full description of curtesy, with its incidents, the reader is referred to elementary works on the law of Real Estate.²¹

§ 1346. The Essential of Seisin.

Questions concerning the husband's curtesy are most commonly raised, however, with reference to the second essential above stated, namely, seisin of the wife at some time during coverture. Chancellor Kent says²² that the wife, according to the English law, must have been seised in fact and in deed, and not merely of a seisin in law, of some estate of inheritance. But he admits that this rule was relaxed in equity by a free and liberal construction; and he further intimates that in Connecticut, if not in some other parts of this country, there was a disposition to carry the principle still further. Seisin in law, without actual entry, is in many States at the present day deemed sufficient to give curtesy,²³ although neither husband nor wife ever resided upon the land or exercised acts of ownership over it,²⁴ and receipt of the rents and profits may be enough to show seisin.²⁵

Curtesy exists in a fee of any kind however arising, as in a determinate fee,²⁶ in land inherited by the wife from her family,²⁷ in lands which the husband has bought and had conveyed in fee to the wife,²⁸ through a third party,²⁹ in land which he has voluntarily settled upon her in fee,³⁰ in lands deeded to a wife and her "heirs" or "descendants,"³¹ but not in an estate less than freehold.³² By statute in some States curtesy exists only in lands of which the wife dies seised.³³

§ 1347. Birth of Issue, Curtesy Initiate.

Upon the birth of the child of a marriage alive, tenancy in the husband's right to curtesy is said to be initiate, and afterwards, upon his wife's predecease, consummate.³⁴ "Tenancy by the curtesy initiate, at common law, was an estate which became vested at the birth of issue, and became an estate of the curtesy, proper or consummate, at the death of the wife before that of the husband. It was held to be an estate distinct from that of the wife, alienable by the husband and subject to execution for his debts, and giving to him control of the profits from the wife's lands. It is said that the curtesy, by the laws of England, was given the husband, in part, for the purpose of aiding him in supporting and educating the issue of the marriage. That this was a minor consideration, however, is shown by the fact that continued existence of the issue after birth was not necessary to raise or to support the estate. The early writers on the common law disclose that a deeper reason lay in the feudal system which obtained in England in early times, and which affected real property in so many ways. The husband, having become dignified by having an interest in lands, was bound to do homage to his superior lord; and the interest, being once vested in him, it was the policy of the feudal system not to suffer it to determine during the life of the husband, as otherwise the lord might lose the homage that was his due from the land. To this estate the husband never had any natural right."³⁵

Curtesy is initiate from the time of seisin and the birth of issue alive, and unless it is defeated by will or deed, becomes consummate on the wife's death, and relates back to the time it became initiate.³⁶ Where no child is born of the marriage the husband is not entitled to curtesy initiate,³⁷ but after issue born the husband has a vested right called an inchoate right of curtesy or curtesy initiate.³⁸

Curtsey depends on the birth of children and not on their survival. So even if all the children should die in early infancy, leaving the father wholly unburdened with the duty of supporting any child, still if he survives the wife he would be entitled to curtesy if the other requisites existed. So if some of the children are stepchildren being born of the mother by a former marriage, still if there are any children of the second marriage the second husband is entitled to curtesy.³⁹ The birth of issue is enough whether before or after the acquisition of the land, and it is immaterial whether such issue be living or dead at the time of the seisin or at the wife's death.⁴⁰ The birth of issue capable of inheriting must occur, so where the inheritance is in tail male, birth of a female child is not enough.⁴¹ § 1348. Equitable Estates.

To entitle a husband to curtesy in the wife's equitable estate of inheritance, it is only needful that the requisites of such a title in legal estates existed. Actual possession of the estate, or the receipt of rents, issues, and profits by her, or possession by her trustee for her benefit, is a seisin of equitable estate equivalent to legal seisin, and sufficient,⁴² but not where the husband by conveyance creates an equitable estate in the wife.⁴³

An antenuptial or postnuptial settlement by the husband upon his wife is not necessarily inconsistent with his rights of curtesy on surviving her.⁴⁴ And the right extends to equities of redemption, contingent uses, and moneys directed to be laid out in lands for the wife's benefit; which moneys equity treats as land.⁴⁵ Curtesy may be retained even out of lands conveyed by the wife in a deed of trust as surety for the husband's debts,⁴⁶ but not in land held by the wife in trust.⁴⁷

§ 1349. Life Estates and Remainders.

An estate for the wife's own life terminates, of course, at her death, and the surviving husband has no concern with it; but if it be for the life of another person who survives her, the husband takes the profits during the remnant of the term as special occupant.⁴⁸

Curtesy, however, will attach where the intervening estate terminates before the wife's death,⁵³ and where the wife, being seised, conveys to another a life estate, and dies before the life tenant, curtesy will attach.⁵⁴ A statute giving the husband curtesy in the wife's real property gives him curtesy in a vested remainder.⁵⁵

tition her interest in her father's estate during the life of her mother is binding on the husband's curtesy right.⁶⁴ § 1352. Land Limited to the Separate Use of the Wife.

As for real estate settled or devised to the wife's separate use, curtesy originally could not be claimed of a use; but modern equity does not regard the husband as deprived of his usual right of curtesy in such property upon surviving the wife,⁶⁵ unless by the clear terms of the trust he has been excluded therefrom.⁶⁶ Hence curtesy does not exist where land is granted to the separate use of the wife in language excluding all his marital rights,⁶⁷ or in the statutory separate estate of the wife which the husband has created for her benefit without reserving to himself his marital rights.⁶⁸ And while the rule of equity is that the wife may exercise her power of disposition over separate property during her lifetime (not to speak of rights of testamentary disposition), her sole conveyance cannot generally be regarded as a regular disposition effectually to exclude curtesy.⁶⁹

as mere marriage prior to the passage of an act altering curtesy does not prevent the application of the act to him,⁷⁸ but a statute affecting curtesy will not alter a husband's rights of curtesy initiate acquired before its passage,⁷⁹ but will affect his curtesy in lands acquired after its passage.⁸⁰

Of late years tenancy by the curtesy has become practically infrequent in England by reason of the prevalence of marriage settlements excluding such right.⁸¹

Not only did the common-law rule of curtesy fail to find bases on natural or moral right; the estate, introduced into the mother country from Normandy for feudal reasons, could not long stand in full virtue as a thing that harmonized with the principles of American democracy; so that, after a few generations of reverence for the ancient rule, the legislatures of this country began to abolish curtesy initiate entirely, or to deprive that particular tenancy of some of its more rigorous features, until now it stands greatly and essentially modified, or has been abolished absolutely, in many States.

Features at first thus stripped from the estate initiate were the Former marriage. A statute providing that if any deceased wife leaves issue by a "former marriage" the surviving husband shall not be entitled to curtesy applies, although the former husband was the same man as the widower. right of the husband, as tenant, to sell and transfer the realty of the wife, and the right of his creditors to sell it under execution for his debts. As applied to curtesy initiate, the common-law rule worked a deprivation of the wife of the use of her own property during the life of her husband, and the wonder is that the rank injustice of it had to call so long for remedy at the hands of chivalrous legislators of America.

In all or nearly all of the States statutes have been passed enlarging the rights and powers of married women in respect to their real property. In many instances this is done by prohibiting the sale by the husband of his wife's realty, without her joining in the conveyance, and protecting the property from levy and sale under judgment or decree against the husband.

Decisions are not entirely uniform in the several jurisdictions as to the effect of such a statute upon the common-law estate of the curtesy initiate. Probably the soundest conception of the situation produced by such legislation is to treat the curtesy initiate as not abolished or entirely destroyed, but as reduced from an estate that is vested to a right that is contingent. In this view the husband has not an estate, but, more properly speaking, a status, entitling him to an estate by the curtesy consummate on the contingency that his wife dies. The precedent birth of a living child then becomes a mere condition of the vestiture of the estate by the curtesy consummate; and it is no longer the factor which creates in the husband a vested estate by the curtesy initiate.⁸² Therefore a statute providing that a married woman shall have the same capacity to acquire, hold, manage, control and dispose of all her property as if unmarried effects this result, and a clause that the husband's rights by curtesy shall not be affected will be held applicable only to curtesy consummate.⁸³

fied in some of them, expressly or by implication, by late statutes. In Iowa and Indiana, curtesy is expressly abolished, and a certain defined interest in the wife's real estate, of the dower sort, goes to her husband instead by way of inheritance. In Texas, California, Louisiana, and other States where the tenure of real estate comes from the community or civil law, rather than the common law, curtesy is not recognized. In some of the States the right of curtesy appears to be denied to husbands who wilfully neglect and desert their wives. In most New England States, as Maine, Vermont, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island, and in various other parts of the country, tenancy by the curtesy is expressly reserved by statute.

but under an act providing that the property of a married woman shall remain her own, and may be devised as if she were sole, the husband has no curtesy rights in land devised by her.⁸⁵ A statute as to the separate estates of married women is not applicable to equitable estates and does not affect curtesy therein.⁸⁶

§ 1357. Husband's Rights as Tenant.

The estate devolving thus upon the husband, without requiring further formalities on his part, and regardless of the circumstance of child or children still surviving, he enjoys the usual rights of a life tenant in his own right, including those of occupation; enjoying rents and profits during his term, together with his necessary fuel and other so-called reasonable estovers, and at his death leaving to his executors and administrators the right to obtain emblems or profits of the growing crop.⁸⁷ cannot be recovered against a husband and his son who together occupy premises in which he has curtesy.⁸⁹ A tenant by curtesy cannot license another to commit waste,⁹⁰ as by giving another a license to take mineral⁹¹ or timber,⁹² but the husband as tenant by the curtesy is entitled to the royalties on land owned by the wife for coal mining after her death.⁹³

As the tenant by curtesy is at least a quasi trustee for remaindermen, he cannot acquire title by adverse possession against them.⁹⁴

§ 1358. Improvements by Husband and Other Claims.

So the general rule is strict as regards improvements made by the husband upon his wife's real estate. The English doctrine is, that if the husband erects buildings upon his wife's lands, or otherwise makes permanent improvements thereon, expending his own money for such purpose, the presumption is that he intended the expense for his wife's benefit, and he cannot recover for it.⁹⁵ Several cases of this sort have come before our own courts, the claims being usually presented after the wife's death; and this principle has been rigidly applied, though doubtless occasioning in some instances positive hardship and wrong.⁹⁶ And since the husband has no interest in improvements upon his wife's real estate, neither, of course, have his creditors.⁹⁷ Agreements between husband and wife might vary the principle. If a husband improves his wife's land without any agreement for compensation, he cannot bring in a claim after her death, to be enforced either against her estate or her heirs.⁹⁸ But where a husband, borrowing money on the security of his wife's lands, lays the money out in improvements thereon, with her manifest approval, equity will relieve him from liability, for repayment of the principal, while, as a tenant by the curtesy, he would be bound to keep down the interest.⁹⁹

The surviving husband cannot be reimbursed for the amount expended by him in improving the wife's real estate, as a presumption arises in all such cases the consideration and motive of the husband was that he would be reimbursed by use and enjoyment of the land. Nall v. Miller, 95 Ky.

Inasmuch as the husband's interests in his wife's lands is limited to the usufruct as a life-tenant, and Anglo-Saxon policy has been that landed property should descend to one's blood relations, it follows that all claims presented by him against her real estate, after her death, in relation to such property, will be closely scrutinized. Thus it has been held that he cannot claim reimbursement for moneys paid in settling controversies in regard to the title of his wife's real estate.¹ So where a husband was sued with his wife for her debt contracted before marriage, and secured by a mortgage of her land, and after her death voluntarily suffered judgment to be rendered against him for the amount of the debt, when he knew that he was not legally liable to a judgment, and paid the debt on execution, taking to himself no assignment of the mortgage, but suffering it to be discharged altogether, it is held that he cannot seek indemnity from his wife's heirs either at law or in equity, even though he had misapprehended the legal effect of his consent to the judgment.² § 1359. Husband's Rights of Action.

The tenant by curtesy has title which will support ejectment,² or he may defend an action for possession,⁴ and the owners of the fee are not necessary parties to an action by the tenant by curtesy to protect his possession,⁵ and he is not entitled to damages for detention of the property until after demand for possession.⁶ The husband's interests as tenant by curtesy are not such a present interest as entitles him to contest the will of the wife's mother,⁷ but he may be entitled to contest his wife's will;⁸ but a divorced husband has ordinarily no right to contest the will of his former wife⁹ even though he may have a contingent interest in her estate in case of the death of a child.¹⁰

At common law the husband has a right to sue in his own name for damages to his estate by curtesy initiate, as it is a vested estate. There is a peculiar doctrine in Tennessee, however, which regards the husband and wife as joint owners, and under this doctrine it is held that where the wife conveys the property without joining him he has no right to bring suit against the grantee without joining her as party plaintiff.¹¹ Possession by the heir does not operate to start the statute of limitations, since it is the duty of the heir to assign curtesy.¹²

For an injury to the wife's inheritance in lands the husband cannot sue alone, since the causes of action will not survive to him.¹³ Consequently he cannot prosecute such an action after the death of the wife during the pendency of such a suit and before judgment.¹⁴ If the husband should die first, however, the suit will not abate, as he is not the real plaintiff.¹⁵

§ 1360. Assignment of Curtesy.

Statutory proceedings in some States have superseded the old petition to assign curtesy,¹⁶ but the tenant by curtesy has no right to demand a sale of the entire estate, and any statute purporting to give him such right is unconstitutional.¹⁷

The tenant by curtesy has the burden of proving birth of issue,¹⁸ and has the burden of proving that he has renounced the provisions of his wife's will in his favor.¹⁹

In valuing curtesy the value of the timber on the land should not be deducted,²⁰ but the value of coal or other mineral in unopened mines should be, as a life tenant has no interest in unopened mines.²¹

§ 1361. Sale or Devise by Wife.

At common law, where lands of the wife were converted into personalty, and sold by the joint deed and concurrence of husband and wife, the money, when collected, became the husband's;²³ and where land is sold containing unopened coal mines the tenant by the curtesy is entitled to an interest in the fund created by the sale. The fact that the mines were unopened at the death of the wife and that the tenant by the curtesy had no right to work them himself is not evidence that he had no interest in them, even though that interest was valueless until the mines were opened or sold by the owner of the fee.²³ But equity was always disposed to regard the wife's intention in such transactions, and treat proceeds as real or personal estate accordingly; and such must be more strenuously the tendency of courts under the married women's acts,²⁴ and such we

Both husband and wife must join in a deed of land in which the husband has a right of curtesy initiate,²⁶ although in some States by statute the wife has a right at any time to bar curtesy by conveyance or devise.²⁷ The wife may convey alone a fee-simple title subject to the contingency that the husband outlives her.²⁸ The wife cannot bar curtesy by devising her lands to third persons,²⁹ except with the husband's assent,³⁰ or under a statute giving her the power to devise as if sole.³¹

The joinder of a husband with his wife in a mortgage of her lands does not affect his right of curtesy except as a release in favor of the mortgagee³² and he takes his curtesy subject to the mortgage.³³ Where the husband and wife make a mortgage on her § 1363. Effect of Judicial Sale.

Curtesy may be barred by the participation of the husband in a judicial sale of the property,³⁸ or a sale under some appropriate proceedings where both spouses had created an incumbrance,³⁹ or may be barred by a sale in partition⁴⁰ but is not barred by a judicial sale at which he was not present where he did not at the time know of his rights.⁴¹

§ 1364. Sale of Curtesy Rights.

Curtesy is merely a status and not a vested right and is not separately alienable during coverture, but is a mere possibility, and not being coupled with any interest in the property cannot be made the subject of mortgage or transfer.⁴³ In some States, however, by statute a tenant by curtesy may convey his rights,⁴⁴ but such a sale is subject to a mortgage lien.⁴⁵

The husband's curtesy in real estate where he has joined in a mortgage of it extends only to the equity above the mortgage where the statute defines curtesy as such of the wife's interest as has not been barred. Ketterer v. Nelson, 146 Ky. 7, 141 S. W. 409, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 754.

A sale by the father of land in which he had a curtesy right gives the daughter, who holds the fee, no right to any of the proceeds, since the father could not sell the fee.⁴⁶

A sale of curtesy is subject to taxes where no representation to the contrary is made.⁴⁶

§ 1365. Release.

A release of curtesy in a contract of separation is based upon a valid consideration and is valid,⁴⁷ and an agreement in settlement of curtesy rights is binding,⁴⁸ but usually a contract between husband and wife by which he gives up his curtesy is invalid even though she devises lands to him in reliance on it.⁴⁹ Curtesy cannot be affected by an antenuptial agreement that there shall be no curtesy.⁵⁰ The husband's conveyance of land in ignorance of an

50. Kennedy v. Koopman, 166 Mo. 87, 65 S. W. 1020.

A release of curtesy contained in an antenuptial contract becomes executed by marriage and leaves the interest which his wife had in it does not operate to release his right of dower.⁵¹

§ 1366. Waiver.

The husband may waive his curtesy where he ratifies his wife's will by qualifying as executor under it,⁵² but he is not barred where he qualifies under his wife's will naming him as trustee of property for others where he actually keeps possession and takes rents.⁵³

The right of renunciation of a will is available only in the proper tribunal of the testator's domicile. It is an incident to the jurisdiction of the tribunal which has the exclusive power to admit the will to probate and proceeds from the jurisdiction over the matter of probate.⁵⁴ Therefore, where a husband accepts the provisions made for him by his wife's will in the State of his domicile he will not be allowed to repudiate them and claim against the will in another State.⁵⁵

Curtesy is not barred by failure to assert it until the death of life tenants under the wife's deed,⁵⁶ but where the husband signs blank deeds of his wife's property he is then estopped as against her grantee to claim curtesy.⁵⁷ The husband does not waive his distributive share in property which the wife owns by claiming his homestead rights in property which she did not own but which he erroneously thought belonged to her.⁵⁸ § 1367. Loss of Wife's Seisin.

Curtesy may be barred by loss of title by the wife by adverse possession⁵⁹ or where the statute turns the wife's fee tail into a life estate.⁶⁰

§ 1368. Divorce.

A divorce generally terminates curtesy rights⁶¹ even where the wife has been divorced for her own fault⁶² and especially where granted for desertion by the husband,⁶³ and a decree of separation has the same effect as to lands subsequently acquired by the wife although it does not affect his curtesy in lands belonging to her at the time of the decree.⁶⁴ Where the husband by stipulation in a divorce decree agrees to give up his curtesy on demand and she dies without making demand her heirs cannot insist on the release.⁶⁵ If the husband conveys his curtesy interest and thereafter the wife

During coverture a husband has no interest in the separate estate of his wife and as she lost all interest in the land during her life by adverse possession he has no curtesy. Calvert v. Creditors of Husband.—At common law after issue born a husband was seised in his own right of a life estate which was vendible and subject to sale for his debts even during his wife's life,⁷¹ but in this country a husband's curtesy right is not usually subject to the payment of his debts during the life of his wife,⁷² but after the death of the wife the curtesy interest may be taken § 1371. Imprisonment or Crime.

Curtesy may be lost by the imprisonment of the husband under a statute providing that such imprisonment renders the person civilly dead.⁷⁵ Where the statute expressly makes the husband the heir of the wife, the court has no authority to make an exception against the husband who murders the wife, especially where there is no evidence that the murder is committed in order to obtain her property.⁷⁶ The remedy is for the legislature and not for the court. Such act of the court would contravene constitutional provisions that no conviction shall work a corruption of blood or forfeiture of estate.⁷⁷

CHAPTER III.

NATURE OF DOWER.

SECTION 1374. Dower in General — Dower and Curtesy Compared.

1375. Origin and Nature of the Widow's Dower.

1376. Effect of Dower Interest in Keeping Estate Open.

§ 1374. Dower in General — Dower and Curtesy Compared.

While marriage impresses at once, at common law, the personal property of the wife with a new title — namely, that of her husband — the personal property of the husband remains unaffected thereby. He may buy, sell, and dispose of his own goods and chattels after marriage as before, without let or hindrance from his wife. She cannot be said to acquire a title to his general personal property, actual or potential (independently of a gift or settlement), until her coverture has terminated. Then her rights are rather those of a widow than of a wife. But as to the husband's real estate, which in old times was the only property regarded at law as really of much consequence, the rule has always been otherwise. The husband's possible life interest attached to the wife's lands whenever acquired by her; the wife's possible life interest to the husband's lands whenever acquired by him. The husband's estate was known as curtesy, the wife's as dower. These estates had not, perhaps, the same origin: they certainly had not, in all respects, the same incidents; but both rights were known in England from a very early period, and both have remained with very little change down to a recent date in England and America.

Each estate is in the nature of a possible encumbrance, and conveyances seek to get rid of it whenever the owner of lands wishes to pass the title in fee to another. Dower, to be sure, gave the widow only a life interest to the extent of one-third, while curtesy gave the surviving husband the full life interest. But on the other hand, dower became absolute in the widow when she outlived her husband, while curtesy, as we have seen, never attached at all unless the husband outlived his wife and was fortunate enough to have had a child by her besides. So that in these respects the rights of husband and wife, on the whole, if not equivalent, were nearly so. And as the reader may have already inferred, the general rule as to descent of real estate has been that, subject to the widow's dower, the lands of a husband descend to his own heirs; while subject to the surviving husband's curtesy, the lands of a wife descend to her own heirs; our policy being to preserve real estate in the family, so to speak, of the respective parties to a marriage, in default of issue capable of inheriting from both.⁸⁴

§ 1375. Origin and Nature of the Widow's Dower.

Dower has been defined as that provision which the law makes for a widow out of the lands or tenements of her husband.⁸⁵ Its real basis is the common law of England, as modified by statute.⁸⁶

84. See 1 Washb. Real Prop. 127, 147; Jenks v. Langdon, 21 Ohio St. 362; Howard v. Strode, 242 Mo. 210, 146 S. W. 792, 799.

85. Co. Litt. 30 a; 3 Bl. Com. 130; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 146.

An inchoate right of dower is a kind of property, with incidents sui generis; it is more than a possibility, and may be denominated a contingent interest, and it is an incumbrance upon land, protected by the courts during coverture. Fitcher v. Griffiths, 216 Mass. 174, 103 N. E. 471.

In North Carolina dower has been defined as the statutory provision made for the widow out of the estate of the husband, as part of the interstate laws of the State, and is not a result of the contract of marriage.

Corporation Commission v. Dunn, 174 N. C. 679, 94 S. E. 481.

"Dower" ordinarily means the interest which the law gives to a widow in the lands of her deceased husband, and has no application to the relation of parent and child. Middleworth v. Ordway, 191 N. Y. 404, 84 N. E. 291.

Dower is an interest in land of which the husband is seised during coverture, arising in favor of the wife upon the consummation of marriage and the seisin of the husband. Elder v. McIntosh, 88 S. C. 286, 70 S. E. 807; Vantage Mining Co. v. Baker, 170 Mo. App. 457, 155 S. W. 466; Hilton v. Sloan, 37 Utah, 359, 108 P. 689.

86. Bryon v. Bryon, 134 App. Div. 320, 119 N. Y. S. 41.

In its technical sense the word relates to real estate only. It is said to be given for her support and the nurture of her children; but it applies, in fact, whenever she is the survivor, without reference to her actual circumstances as to means of support or the burden of a family. Dower extends to all estates of inheritance which the husband has held at any period of the coverture in his own right, and which any issue of hers might, if born, possibly inherit.

The word dower is of ancient origin, and seems to come from the word dos at the civil law, which, however, signified something quite different, and more nearly approaching what we express by the term dowry. Whether the custom of dower was introduced into England by the Saxons, or came over with the Normans, is a disputed question; but it was clearly established at or before the reign of Henry III. An early writer remarks that "tenant in dower is so much favored as that it is the common byword of the law that the law favoereth three things: life, liberty, dower."⁸⁷ But these three things do not seem to have kept an equal pace in the march of civilization.

There were various kinds of dower at the English law, one only of which — namely, dower at common law — is in use in this country. Dower at common law extends to one-third of the husband's real estate, and is often known as the "widow's thirds,"⁸⁸ though of course inapplicable in this sense to her distributive share of personal property. Ancient customs varied the proportion somewhat in England; thus gavelkind gave one-half instead of one-third, and was limited to widowhood. The other species of dower were abolished by statute in England in the time of

There is much controversy as to whether the wife's interest before the death of her husband is an interest in land or whether it is simply an inchoate right of action.⁹⁰

§ 1376. Effect of Dower Interest in Keeping Estate Open.

The existence of a dower interest is enough to keep an estate open so that an administrator de bonis may be appointed and so that the heirs are not barred even after a long lapse of time in asking for one.⁹¹

CHAPTER IV.

ESSENTIALS OF DOWER.

SECTION 1377. Essentials of Dower.

1378. Marriage.

1379. Rights of Divorced Wife.

1380. The Essential of Seisin in the Husband.

1381. The Husband's Seisin in Trust Property, etc.

§ 1377. Essentials of Dower.

The three essentials of dower nearly correspond with those of curtesy: birth of issue, as we have said, not being requisite. They are marriage, seisin of the husband, and his death. But a careful comparison of the two estates at the old law shows some inequalities: thus, while the husband might have curtesy in the wife's trust property, the wife could not claim dower from that of her husband. This injustice grew out of an apparent necessity: it was remedied in England by the late dower act, and apparently never had a firm foothold in the United States.⁹²

§ 1378. Marriage.

A claim for dower depends on a valid marriage and a void marriage although honestly entered into will not suffice⁹³ and even a common-law marriage may be sufficient⁹⁴ and the wife claiming dower has a burden of establishing a valid marriage.⁹⁵ Where parties marry in good faith and live together as husband and wife and by their joint efforts accumulate property the wife will be entitled to share in it although it is in the name of the husband on his death, although the marriage was void as entered into within the time after the husband had obtained a divorce during which marriage is prohibited.⁹⁶

A devise by a man to his assumed wife is not void simply because it appears that her marriage to him was void as made within the prohibited period after her divorce where the parties had lived together for some years as man and wife and that the testator thought the devisee was his lawful wife. Here it is clear whom the testator intended as the object of his bounty and it did not appear that the devise was obtained by any fraud on the part of the devisee.⁹⁷

§ 1379. Rights of Divorced Wife.

A statute declaratory of the common law as to dower and allowing this right to a widow may include a divorced woman as the word "widow" is comprehensively employed to designate the person entitled to dower. The right to dower is not dependent on the woman being the wife at the time of her husband's decease.

Where the wife obtains a divorce in another State on grounds not recognized in the State where the lands lie the general policy of the law in the State where the lands lie will govern and the wife preserves her dower in lands owned by him during their marriage. The divorced wife has no dower in lands acquired by the husband after the divorce.⁹⁸

§ 1380. The Essential of Seisin in the Husband.

The only essential of dower which calls for especial notice is the second; for we have elsewhere considered what constitutes a marriage; and as to the death of a husband leaving a widow surviving, it need only be remarked that, recognizing that legal presumption of death which arises from one's absence for seven years without being heard from, our courts sometimes allow dower where the fact of the husband's death cannot be positively established.⁹⁹ What, then, is that seisin of the husband which entitles his widow to dower in the premises at the common law?

Briefly, then, bearing in mind that the husband's inheritance must have been his during the particular marriage, dower does not attach to a mere reversion or remainder expectant upon a freehold in another so long as that freehold remains outstanding. And no more could curtesy; the freehold must terminate during marriage in order that there be a sufficient seisin in the husband to support the dower interest; in other words, his estate of inheritance must become a vested, not remain an expectant right;¹ even though the remainder-man be in possession of the estate,² the husband's inheritance must have been an entire one. But, on familiar principles of real-estate law, the intermediate estate being less than a freehold, as a mere lease for years, a seisin of the reversion or remainder in fee will suffice.³ A merger of estates so as to unite the inheritance in the husband gives dower;⁴ so dower can be claimed in the estate of a tenant in common, though not, of course, in the estate of one joint-tenant who leaves another surviving him;⁵ even to exhaustion in mines owned by the husband which had been opened during his lifetime.⁶ Since equity impresses land with the fictitious character of personalty, upon consideration of the actual circumstances attending its purchase and the purpose for which it is held, it is not always easy to say whether a widow can claim dower in partnership lands.⁷ Dower in such lands cannot be claimed until the partnership debts have been paid,⁸ and until equitable claims between the partners have been adjusted.⁹ After such payment the proceeds may be treated as real estate to which dower will attach.¹⁰ As to lands given or taken in exchange during her husband's lifetime, the exchange being of obviously equal interests, the rule is not quite clear, though it would seem that the widow will be put to her election between the parcels.¹¹

§ 1381. The Husband's Seisin in Trust Property, etc.

Of the earlier and later rule concerning the wife's right of dower in her husband's trust property we have just spoken; and although that right is now very generally recognized in England and America, it is doubtless only coextensive with the husband's beneficial interest in the land; the rule could not possibly give the widow of a trustee dower in land held by him merely as such and for others without sanctioning robbery of the beneficiaries.¹²

Dower in trust property, at the present day, is most frequently considered with reference to the foreclosure of mortgages; and here a court of equity applies a most liberal rule: for while the widow of the mortgagee cannot claim dower in the mortgaged premises until after foreclosure,¹³ and although the widow of a mortgagor was not dowable in his equity of redemption at common law,¹⁴ the mortgagor's widow not only has every reasonable facility

The husband's seisin, therefore, was not, even at common law, necessarily one in fact or an actual seisin; to support the wife's dower, it was enough that he had a seisin in law, with a right to an immediate seisin in fact. His seisin might not be an indefeasible one, yet her claim was good so long as it was not actually defeated.²⁵

A momentary seisin is enough; as in the old case where a father and son were hanged together, and the latter, being seen to struggle longer than the former, was decided to have inherited the land from his father as he swung, so as to give to his own widow a right of dower therein.²⁶ But the seisin, though momentary, should be bona fide and beneficial, and not by way of conduit merely, as where one is the medium of title to a third party, or purchases with a simultaneous reconveyance to secure the purchase money.²⁷ The fact that the mortgage back is made on the same day is not of itself conclusive evidence of a merely instantaneous seisin.²⁸ Not only is the attempt of a husband to defraud his wife of her dower interest in his lands readily frustrated in the courts, but the widow grantees at his death, he reserving the rents and profits for life, the title passed at the time of the delivery in escrow, and no dower interest attached in favor of a wife under a marriage after the delivery in escrow. Yutte v. Yutte, 39 Misc. 272, 79 N. Y. S. 492.

§ 1383. Dower Defeated in England Under Modern Statutes.

Manifestly in ancient theory the widow's dower was an independent and valuable interest. But in England, through the medium of trusts and the operation of the doctrine already noticed, the conveyancers for generations have been enabled to defeat this estate. The English Dower Act, 3 & 4 Will. IV, c. 105, while it places dower and curtesy on a like favorable footing as to trust estates, provides further that no widow shall be entitled to dower "out of any land which shall have been absolutely disposed of by her husband in his lifetime or by his will."³¹ Little, therefore, is left for the law to operate upon; for the husband, by his independent act, may now extinguish all dower encumbrances whatsoever.

§ 1384. Dower Under Modern American Statutes.

While the law of dower has been gradually fading out of sight in England, it attains its fuller development in this country. Curiously enough, most of the modern cases on this subject are American.³² In New York the widow can only claim dower in lands of which her husband died seised and such is the rule of various other States as to equitable estates at least, like an equity of redemption.³³ In several States her interest is treated as something for the benefit of herself and children jointly. In others, the "thirds" are dispensed with, and a different rate is fixed. There are statutes which authorize a wife to clear wild land and reduce it to culture, though it be to cut and clear timber more freely than a dowress was permitted to. And finally, the State of Indiana has set a good example by abolishing both curtesy and dower, and substituting in behalf of husband and wife an interest in fee in one another's real estate, remaining at decease, on principles analogous to the descent and distribution of personal property of intestates; thus placing both sexes on the mutual footing of justice, and treating lands and personal estate as subject to corresponding rules.³⁴ In some States dower is abolished.³⁵ § 1385. Validity and Effect of Statutes.

It is generally held that the legislature may increase, diminish or abolish, dower,³⁶ or substitute another estate for it,³⁷ even as to § 1386. Extended to Lands of Which Husband Seised During Coverture.

But under most statutes dower attaches to all land of which the husband is seised of an estate of inheritance during coverture, either actually,⁴⁰ or beneficially, another holding the legal seisin to his use,⁴¹ if he has a right to immediate possession amounting to seisin in law.⁴² He must be actually or beneficially seised during coverture.⁴³ § 1387. Limitation to Lands of Which Husband Dies Seised.

Our local statutes have very generally favored the widow's rights, and unless she has joined her husband in his conveyances during his life, or statutes restrain her rights, she may usually assert the privilege at his death. But dower is found a great inconvenience in an age when real estate passes from hand to hand as an article of commercial traffic; and legislatures show some disposition to get rid of it altogether, together with curtesy. In New York the widow can only claim her dower out of lands of which her husband died seised.⁴⁴ Some statutes limit the dower right to land of which the husband dies seised,⁴⁵ especially where the wife is a non-resident.⁴⁶

States now generally exclude from dower lands owned prior to coverture.⁴⁷ § 1389. Extent of Dower Interest.

In some States the statute gives dower in one-third in value of the husband's land.⁴⁸ Other statutes give an alternative estate which the widow may elect in place of dower,⁴⁹ or an estate in fee in a portion of the husband's property in lieu of dower,⁵⁰ which will pass to the widow's heirs.⁵¹ Such an estate is a substitute for common-law dower.⁵² Dower is sometimes given in leaseholds,⁵³ and in remainders.⁵⁴

In Arkansas, if there are no children, the widow takes as dower one-third of the husband's personalty as against creditors, and one-half as against collateral heirs, the same rule applying to real estate. Dower will be assigned in real and personal property separately, and a deficiency in either cannot be made up out of the other. Mayo v. Valley, etc., Co., 132 Ark. 64, 200 S. W. 505; McCann v. Daly, 168 Ill. App. 287.

The Kansas statute gives a widow one-half in value of realty of which the husband dies legally or equitably seized. Osborn v. Osborn, 102 Kan. 890, 172 P. 23.

Any interest which the law gives to a widow in the estate of her deceased husband is loosely called "dower." Larned v. Larned, 98 Kan. 328, 158 P. 3.

Like an inchoate right of dower, a wife's statutory right and interest, by descent, in her husband's realty, is a kind of property with incidents sui generis, a valuable interest which is frequently the subject of contract and bargain, more than a possibility, which may well be denominated a contingent interest, and also a right of value depending on the incident of ownership. Whiting v. Whiting, 114 Me. 382, 96 A. 500.

In Michigan the dower right is an estate in severalty in such part of the land as will yield one-third of the entire income of the whole. King v. Merritt, 67 Mich. 194, 34 N. W. 689.

The Missouri statute providing that a widow shall not take dower till her husband's "debts, due or to become due," have been paid, includes only liquidated debts, and not an unliquidated right of action for breach of covenant. Bartlett v. Ball, 142 Mo. 28, 43 S. W. 783.

54. Under the Connecticut statute providing that dower shall attach to lands of which the husband "dies possessed in his own right," dower may attach to an equitable remainder in fee, though the possession was in the trustee, the dower interest being subject to the paramount title of the trustee for the purposes of the trust. Greene v. Huntington, 73 Conn. 106, 46 A. 883; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 73 Conn. 303, 47 A. 325.

§ 1390. Indiana Rule.

In Indiana, where the husband's title to land is divested by a judicial sale, the wife's dower right becomes consummate at once, as though he were dead, if the decree does not direct that her interest be sold or barred.⁵⁵

In such cases she takes an absolute estate (Powers v. Nesbitt, 127 Ind. 497, 27 N. E. 501), and where the estate of an insane husband is sold by order of court (Lawler v. Bear [Ind], 122 N. E. 660), as well as where a mortgage in which she does not join is foreclosed against her husband (Pouder v. Ritzinger, 102 Ind. 571, 1 N. E. 44). The same is true where his estate vests in an assignee in bankruptcy (Haggerty v. Byrne, 75 Ind. 499), becoming tenant in common with the purchaser to the extent of an undivided third, without interest in the other third (Buser v. Shepard, 107 Ind. 417, 8 N. § 1391. To What Dower Attaches.

Dower attaches to all lands, tenements, or hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal, of which the husband may have been seised in fee or in tail.⁵⁶ Generally it attaches without regard to the length of time during which title remains in the husband.⁵⁷ But the husband's estate must have been one of inheritance, since the wife's estate is said to be a mere continuance of the estate of her husband. Very nice questions have arisen as to what constitutes an estate of inheritance. Thus where a husband has a life estate with fee-simple in the heirs of his body, his wife cannot claim dower; nor can she in a term of years, however long.⁵⁸ Nor can she claim, even though he holds an estate for another's life, and dies before the cestui que vie,⁵⁹ nor generally where he holds for life only.⁶⁰

§ 1392. Adverse Possession.

If the husband's title depends on adverse possession, the statute must have completely run in order to entitle the wife to dower.⁶¹ § 1393. Land Held Under Contract of Purchase.

It is generally held that land of which a husband is possessed under an executory contract of purchase is an "estate of inheritance," within the meaning of statutes regulating dower,⁶² even though he has paid but a portion of the purchase price.⁶³

Such an interest is equitable, but in such equitable estate there is no inchoate right of dower until the husband's death, and an allowed in long terms of years, these being treated as real estate while fifty years remain. Mass. Gen. Laws, ch. 186, § 1.

An "estate of inheritance," within the meaning of such rule, need not be one free of incumbrance or lien. Casteel v. Potter, 176 Mo. 76, 75 S. W. 597; Radley v. Radley, 78 N. J. Eq. 170, 78 A. 194; Hazelwood v. Mayes (S. C.), 96 S. E. 672; Gray's Adm'r v. Gray, 144 Ky. 603, 139 S. W. 838.

A full equitable title to real estate and a beneficial interest therein, the holder of the legal title having no duty to perform except to convey to the holder of the equitable title, is an estate of inheritance within the dower statute. Contra, *Hutchinson v. assignment by the husband defeats all possibility of dower, as it is considered inconvenient to hamper the assignability of executory contracts by giving a wife an inchoate right of dower in their benefits.⁶⁴ § 1394. Defeasible Fee.

Where the husband has a defeasible fee in land which is terminated on his dying without children, and he does die without children, his widow nevertheless has dower in the property. Since the estate of which he was seised was one that could pass to his heirs, it was an estate of inheritance, and it is to estates of this character that dower attaches. Though his estate expired when he dies without leaving children, still his previous seisin of the estate of inheritance therein during the coverture is a basis of dower in his widow.⁶⁵ § 1395. Land Acquired by Devise and Inheritance.

Dower applies to land taken by devise,⁶⁶ and to land acquired in various old-fashioned rights by way of inheritance which are mentioned in the books; and in general wherever no possibility continues interposed to prevent the husband's estate from becoming one of entire inheritance during marriage.⁶⁷ § 1396. Improvements by Co-Tenant.

Where one co-tenant improves the common property by building upon it he has an equity against the other co-tenants to be allowed for the value of the improvements in some way on partition. The court will, when possible on partition, give him his share in the property out of the part which he has improved. This right is not, however, a legal title in which dower can be claimed. Dower can be claimed only in lands of which the husband died seised and possessed, to which he had a legal title. Hence in assigning dower the court should not assign to the widow a dower estate in the improvements placed there by the husband in addition to assigning dower to the land itself.⁶⁸

§ 1397. Insurance Policies.

Under a statute providing that dower shall cover personal property the widow will take dower in insurance policies taken out by her husband on his life, and made payable to his executors on his death, as was seised of them under the insurance laws, and of their proceeds. It is too great a refinement to divide the moment of the testator's death so as to say that a debt which accrued at his death was not owing at his death. It would be making a fanciful distinction to say that this money, which clearly forms part of the testator's estate, was not owing to the testator, because it could not, in any event, be paid to himself, but must be received by his representatives.⁶⁹

§ 1398. Unimproved Lands.

Dower generally attaches to wild lands in our country, at the present day, though perhaps not at the common law;⁷⁰ and to land § 1399. Minerals and Timber.

The word "land" in dower statutes has been held to be comprehensive, and to include minerals in land assigned as dower,⁷³ gas,⁷⁴ and oil flowing from wells on it,⁷⁵ coal in place,⁷⁶ timber growing on it,⁷⁷ gravel and clay,⁷⁸ but not placer mining claims.⁷⁹ Some cases, however, hold that dower attaches only to minerals § 1400. Rents of Leased Land.

Where the deceased husband has executed leases of oil and gas lands the leases necessarily excluded assignment of possession thereof as dower, as the lessees had exclusive right of possession. ASSIGNMENT OF DOWER.

SECTION 1402. Assignment of Dower to the Widow.

1403. By Court.

1404. By Heir or by Agreement.

1405. Time and Manner of Assignment.

1406. Necessity for Demand.

§ 1402. Assignment of Dower to the Widow.

The right of a wife to dower becomes complete on the husband's death, leaving her surviving him. Until dower has been assigned her, the position she occupies is a peculiar one; she has rather a right than an estate; but the moment dower has been assigned and she enters upon the assigned premises, the freehold is vested in her by virtue and in continuance of her husband's seisin.⁹¹ But some cases hold that she takes as a purchaser by virtue of her marital rights.⁹²

A widow's right to dower is not in succession to that of her husband on his death, since she does not succeed to the husband's title, so far as her dower estate is concerned, by the intestate laws, but derives it by virtue of the marriage and in her own right as wife, to be consummated in severalty to her on the husband's death. Crenshaw v. Moore (Tenn.), 137 S. W. 924, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161.

§ 1403. By Court.

Being entitled to a life-third in the lands, an assignment of her portion may be made accordingly; usually by judicial proceedings.⁹³ In the absence of statute only courts of equity have jurisdiction to assign dower,⁹⁴ but the legislature may vest jurisdiction of such proceedings in probate or other courts,⁹⁵ or vest concurrent jurisdiction in courts of both law and equity.⁹⁶

§ 1404. By Heir or by Agreement.

At common law an heir was bound to assign dower and had the power to do so without an order of court,⁹⁷ but the husband's executor had no such power.⁹⁸ Dower may be assigned by agree-

Usually either the widow or the heir may institute proceedings for assignment,³ which may be had without waiting for administration proceedings on her husband's estate.⁴ It should be made before ordering a sale to pay debts,⁵ but may be made even after the estate is fully closed.⁶ The whole dower right should be assigned at one time, to avoid multiplicity of suits,⁷ and is governed by the law of the State where the land lies,⁸ and by the law right of dower is not such an interest as entitles her to contest the will of her husband's father.³⁵ § 1408. Rights of Widow After Assignment.

After assignment the estate of a dowress is that of a freeholder for life, to the extent of her interest. She is answerable for waste, and entitled to her proportion of rents, profits, and reasonable estovers. As to the estate subject to which she holds her dower, she must keep down one-third of the interest upon encumbrances or charges while she lives.³⁶ The rights of a dowress are not dependent on continued occupation or possession of the land assigned.³⁷ The widow's rights determine on her death, either § 1410. Rights to Convey After Assignment of Dower.

When dower has been duly assigned, she has an interest which she can assign or transfer,⁴⁷ or lease,⁴⁸ but her conveyance will pass only her interest.⁴⁹

§ 1411. Actions Before and After Assignment of Dower.

Until assignment she is not a proper party to an action for damage to the husband's land,⁵⁰ nor has she any standing to attack for error a decree against her husband for its possession.⁵¹ After assignment dower is subject to the rights of the dowress' creditors.⁵²

The dower interest in real estate attaches subject to the superior right of a purchase-money mortgage, and the widow is not entitled to assert it as against the prior claim based upon a purchase-money lien.⁵⁶

§ 1413. Rights to Profits Before Assignment of Dower.

A widow is entitled to her proportionate share of the rents and profits accruing between her husband's death and the assignment of her dower,⁵⁷ especially after she has made demand for dower.⁵⁸ But it is at this day quite common for the heirs to pay the widow one-third of the net rents during her natural life, where the lands are not to be sold, or else purchase her share outright for a fixed sum, computed according to the annuity tables.⁵⁹ § 1414. Enjoining Waste.

The wife has during the life of her husband no right to interfere with its management and cannot even enjoin its waste, as her interest is inchoate merely.⁶⁰

other legitimate purposes of husbandry.⁶² Where she makes improvements without the consent of the heirs she cannot charge the husband's estate with the expense.⁶³

§ 1416. Right to Contest Husband's Will.

The question sometimes arises whether a wife has a right to contest her husband's will. It seems clear that under most statutes she is not a party interested to contest where she would take the same share simply by claiming her statutory rights.⁶⁴ But where the widow does not take the same rights as if the testator died intestate, then she is a party interested and entitled to contest.⁶⁵

A divorced wife may have a right to contest the will of her former husband if she has dower or statutory rights in his estate, but not otherwise.⁶⁶

§ 1417. Effect of Conveyance by Heirs.

Any conveyance by the heirs must be subject to the widow's rights.⁶⁷

It has been suggested that the widow's rights to contest are independent of her pecuniary interest as a decree of probate puts on her the burden of claiming her statutory rights even though she may know that the will is a forgery. The court remarks that "It is sufficient that the decree of the court deprives her of property to which she is entitled even though the law permits her to get an equivalent or a greater amount to which if the facts were known she would not have title. She may well say that she wants what belongs to her under the law, as applied to the facts and that she wants nothing the title to which is founded upon a falsehood." *Dexter v. § 1420. To Possession.

Possession or use of the husband's land cannot be enforced by the dowress till the right is consummate by the husband's death,⁷⁸ and according to some cases the dowress cannot have possession against the heir till assignment.⁷⁹ Therefore till assignment she cannot maintain ejectment,⁸⁰ unless the statute gives her the right to possession before assignment.⁸¹ Where she is left in possession, she may maintain it without assignment.⁸² § 1421. Liability for Taxes.

Upon the death of the husband the widow's right of dower becomes consummate. It has ceased to be a contingency. But still it remains a mere right in the nature of a chose in action. The widow has the right to have dower assigned to her, but she has no estate until it is assigned. Presumably the tenant of the freehold is bound to pay the taxes until he assigns the dower. Heirs and devisees have the vested, existing estate. The widow, before dower assignment, is without estate.

It is well settled that the widow is under no obligation to pay taxes assessed against her husband's estate before the assignment of tween the present value of an annuity to the wife for life and the value of a similar annuity depending upon the joint lives of herself and her husband. Brown v. Brown, 94 S. C. 492, 78 S. C. 447.

dower. Therefore, where the widow agrees to take the cash value of her dower interest in lieu of dower, taxes assessed before or after the death of her husband cannot be charged against her.⁸³

§ 1422. Inheritance Taxes.

According to the weight of authority in this country dower rights passing to the widow under statutes taxing inheritances or interests passing under the "inheritance"⁸⁴ or "intestate"⁸⁵ laws are not subject to tax. The theory of the cases seems to be that dower is not an inheritance, but is an inchoate right of the wife in her husband's estate which is made simply vested on his death. There is a strong minority, however, which holds dower to be taxable under the inheritance tax.⁸⁶

Under this latter view the inheritance tax applies to the statutory rights of the widow on her refusing to take under the will of her husband, although the tax applies only to property passing under the intestate laws. It is true that this right is not one strictly arising under the intestate laws, but is one acquired under the marriage relation, but these laws constitute the laws of descent in case of a wife's rights in her husband's estate.⁸⁷

The suggestion that dower is vested in the widow by virtue of the contract of marriage, and passes by such contract and not by law, cannot be sustained. Dower is an estate arising and passing by operation of law. It is not a vested right nor an estate in land, nor is it in any sense based upon an implied contract arising out of the marriage. It is purely statutory, like the laws of devolution of all property upon death, and is therefore "property which passes by will or by the intestate laws of this State," within the terms of an inheritance tax, and is therefore subject to such a tax.⁸⁸

Where the husband and wife are joint owners of certain property on his death, an inheritance tax may be levied on his interest passing to her.⁸⁹

§ 1423. Inheritance Tax Where Widow Takes Under Will.

The dower interest of the widow is held not subject to the succession tax in some States, while it is in others, but even in these latter States, when the widow does not renounce the provisions of the will, but takes under it, she is then subject to the inheritance tax.⁹⁰

Where a widow takes under the will of her husband in lieu of her dower interest she is subject to an inheritance tax on transfers by will, even in States which recognize the doctrine that the dower interest is property which exists inchoately during her husband's lifetime and passes to the widow regardless of the laws governing the disposition of the property by will. The argument is made on the other side that the receipt of real estate to the extent of the value of her dower interest is simply a consideration for the sale of her dower, and that she must be considered as simply having received her dower in this form. The logical answer is that it matters not what the motive of the transfer by will may be, whether to pay a debt or otherwise, if the devise be accepted the transfer is made by will and the State makes the tax depend on that circumstance.⁹¹

§ 1424. Divorce.

Dower may be barred in various ways. The wife's elopement, followed by adultery, was made a cause of forfeiture by an old English statute; and at this day it is generally enough to add that a divorce from bonds of matrimony, procured during the lifetime of the parties, puts an end to dower right, except so far as legislation may save it. The American policy is apparently to make the wife's misconduct the ground of forfeiture under the divorce laws,⁹² but not independently of a divorce.⁹³ Only an absolute divorce can bar dower.⁹⁴ Where a wife secures a divorce and is granted permanent alimony, her dower is generally barred,⁹⁵ but if she obtains the divorce for his fault she generally retains it,⁹⁶ even though obtained in another State for a cause not recognized in the State where the land lies,⁹⁷ but her right will be limited to land acquired prior to the divorce.⁹⁸ In some States divorce bars the supposition that her husband had obtained a divorce, she was held not to have forfeited dower. Grober v. Clements, 71 Ark. 565, 76 S. W. 555.

To bar dower, the adultery need not be continuous (Bond v. Bond's Adm'r, 150 Ky. 389, 150 S. W. 363), and may be committed while living with her husband (Ferguson v. Ferguson, 153 Ky. 742, 156 S. W. 413).

In Illinois a divorced wife retains her dower if the decree is silent on the question. Kirkpatrick v. Kirkpatrick, 197 Ill. 144, 64 N. E. 267.

§ 1425. By Agreement.

Dower may be barred in general by any valid contract or agreement clearly evincing an intention to that effect.¹ Since antenuptial agreements were void at common law, resort was had to equity to enforce such agreements when they barred dower.² To

In Nebraska dower can be barred by antenuptial agreement only in the manner provided by the statute. Fellers v. Fellers, 54 Neb. 595, 74 N. W. 1077.

At common law the essentials of a jointure were that it must consist of an estate or interest in land taking effect in possession or profit immediately on the death of the husband, and must be made in satisfaction of dower and so appear in the deed. It is an absolute bar to dower only where made before marriage, and if made after marriage merely puts the wife to an election between its provisions and her dower. Land v. Shipp, 98 Va. 284, 36 S. An antenuptial contract in consideration of marriage and the release by each party of all interest in the property of the other is based on a sufficient consideration when each is the owner of property in which the other would acquire an interest by reason of the marriage but for the antenuptial agreement, and is sufficient, when equitable in its terms and entered into in good faith, to constitute an equitable bar to dower. Bieger v. Schaible, 81 Neb. 33, 115 N. W. 580, rehearing denied, 81 Neb. 58, 116 N. W. 953.

must make an adequate provision for the widow in lieu of dower.¹² A wife may also bar her dower by a postnuptial contract with¹³ or conveyance to him,¹⁴ if on sufficient consideration.¹⁵

Where a statute provides for a year's support to the widow out of her husband's estate this right is not lost by an antenuptial agreement by which the wife relinquishes all rights to support out of his estate. It is held that it is a matter of public concern that the wife and children shall be supported in a proper case, and therefore no provision in an antenuptial contract, no matter how fair and reasonable, will bind the wife to cut herself off from the right of support in a proper case. Of course the circumstances including the provisions of the contract may be considered in determining whether an allowance should be made; but if, in the particular case, the court finds an allowance to be proper, no relinquishment or waiver in the antenuptial contract can be relied upon to defeat the right to it.¹⁶

§ 1427. Abandonment or Separation.

§ 1428. Alienation of Inchoate Dower by Wife.

The wife's inchoate dower before death of the husband is not assignable to a third party, as it is generally considered against public policy to allow the fee and this inchoate right to be separated.²⁰ That interest is of such an intangible nature that it cannot be conveyed at all, apart from the land, either by her sole deed or by a joint deed, if the husband retains his interest in the land.²¹ § 1431. When Husband's Sole Conveyance Effective.

In some States a husband's deed of land which is his separate property passes a good title without the assent of the wife, if not a homestead.³⁸ A purchase money mortgage by a husband is valid without the assent of the wife.³⁹ When the wife does join she is a joint obligee.⁴⁰ The joinder of wives of cestuis que trust is not necessary where the cestuis que trust merely join a trustee's deed in order to agree to indemnify him and not to perfect title.⁴¹ A wife's dower interest cannot be alienated without her consent.⁴²

Where spouses execute a deed of trust directing the proceeds of land to be paid to them or their representatives, it was held that no estate by the entireties was created, and the rights of the parties after the death of the husband were to be determined according to the rights in the land when the deed was made.⁴³ § 1432. Specific Performance of Husband's Sole Conveyance.

Where the husband has contracted to convey without obtaining the signature of his wife he may be forced in equity to convey his own fee, leaving the dower in the wife separated from the fee.⁴⁴ If the husband, after conveying alone without the joinder of his wife, later makes a conveyance to another in which his wife joins, the second grantee taking with notice of the prior conveyance may be forced to convey the fee to the first grantee, deducting compensation for the value of the dower according to the theory of probabilities.⁴⁵

Where the court orders specific performance of a contract to convey land which is not signed by the wife of the vendor, and where the vendee did not know that the vendor was married at the time the contract was signed, the vendee is entitled to have diminution of the purchase price by the present value of the wife's dower rights.⁴⁶

§ 1433. Effect of Joinder by Wife in Husband's Deed.

A release of dower and homestead in a deed will not pass any other interest the wife may have,⁴⁷ nor will her joinder in a power of attorney to convey his land have that effect,⁴⁸ but where the estate was acquired and improved with her funds it will pass all her interest.⁴⁹ A release of dower and homestead in a mortgage does not affect the wife's right under a prior mortgage.⁵⁰ In some States a wife has no vested interest in her husband's lands,⁵¹ and therefore the consideration of a release of dower and homestead by a wife is prima facie presumed to be the consideration of the deed.⁵² In some States the joinder of a wife as grantor conveys all her interest, including dower and homestead,⁵³ the presumption from her joinder in the granting clause being that the title is joint, and that she does not join merely to release dower and homestead.⁵⁴ Under the Alabama statute rendering the wife not liable on warranties in a deed executed with her husband, title acquired by her after executing such a deed, when the spouses had no title, does not insure to the grantee.⁵⁵ Under the Illinois Married Women's Act a wife is not bound by warranties in a deed wherein she joins with her husband merely to release dower and homestead.⁵⁶ Under the New York statute a mortgage executed by a husband, and describing the whole estate without reservation, passes the whole estate of the wife where she joins in it, though the spouses have separate undivided interests in the property.⁵⁷

§ 1434. Conveyances in Fraud of Dower.

A voluntary antenuptial conveyance by the husband is usually held fraudulent.⁵⁸ The rule applies to antenuptial conveyances by either spouse, if intended to defeat the rights of the other.⁵⁹

The rule applies to personal property.⁶⁰ The wife stands as a creditor in such cases.⁶¹ Such an antenuptial transfer must be without the wife's knowledge.

In general, an antenuptial transfer, to be fraudulent as to the wife, must be without her knowledge.⁶² It will not be fraudulent where the husband retains property sufficient to secure her rights,⁶³ or where he provides for her in his will in a manner satisfactory to her at the time of the conveyance.⁶⁴ It is usually fraudulent where the transfer is of the bulk of the husband's property.⁶⁵ A conveyance made by a man intending to marry, with an intention to defeat the rights of the intended wife, is fraudulent as to her, though he had not then selected her.⁶⁶ It is otherwise where there is no intention to defraud,⁶⁷ or if the transfer was for value, and knowledge of the conveyances to defeat her dower right.⁸⁵ His sole conveyance of his lands cannot be a fraud where the purchaser knows that the wife's right is not barred thereby.⁸⁶ Therefore transfers by him made in good faith are not fraudulent as to her if he has previously provided for her to her satisfaction,⁸⁷ or if she is given a sufficient portion of the proceeds of the conveyance.⁸⁸

Where her property stands in his name, his sale of it without her knowledge for less than its value, and with intent to deprive her of her rights, is fraudulent as to her.⁸⁹ So acts of the husband during his lifetime, committed for the purpose of defrauding the wife of her distributive share in his personal estate after his decease, have been set aside in equity. Thus in Maryland, in a case where it appeared that the husband with such design had turned his personal into real estate, and had then executed conveyances of the real estate to other parties, while retaining the title-deeds in his own hands and keeping in possession of the premises, the conveyances were set aside after his death as a fraud upon his wife's lawful rights.⁹⁰ On the other hand, in Illinois, a husband's transfer of his personal property to his son, in consideration of an annuity for his own life, has been sustained as against his widow, even though made with the design of defeating her distributive rights.⁹¹

The American courts are extending to the wife the same protection long accorded the husband by holding that a conveyance without consideration by the prospective husband before marriage, concealed from the fiancée, will not bar her dower rights.⁹² Such a secret voluntary conveyance by a woman after engagement and before marriage has long been held void against the husband's curtesy, as it is regarded as a fraud on the fiancé.⁹³ If the fiancé discovers the fraud attempted, and then the marriage takes place, he or she is barred by acquiescence.⁹⁴ Such conveyances have, however, been upheld when made to one whom the donor was under some duty to support, as in case of an aged parent.⁹⁵

The recent tendency of the courts is to extend protection to the wife of her dower rights in property conveyed by the husband on the eve of marriage to property conveyed by him to deprive any future wife of her dower even before he was engaged to the woman he later married. This can be supported on the analogy of conveyances void as in fraud of future creditors.⁹⁶

So a conveyance by a man a few days before his marriage, when he was engaged to be married, to his daughters will be annulled as fraudulent as against the dower rights of his wife, especially where the deed was kept secret until after his death and he continued to live upon the property, paying the taxes which were assessed to him.⁹⁷

A man cannot on the eve of his marriage convey his real estate by way of gift without the consent of his intended wife and thus deprive her of the rights of a wife in the real estate thus conveyed. The deed made under such circumstances is not, however, wholly void and will not be set aside except as to her inchoate right of dower. The claim that she would be in a better position in other respects if the land were still his cannot be used to invalidate the deed. The deed could be set aside only so far as to protect some

The general principle is that a wife's release of dower can survive only so long as it attends the estate and conveyance of her husband and when the principal estate falls, the incident must fall with it.¹⁷

dower claims as against the husband's grantee who purchased in good faith.⁴⁰

§ 1440. Murder of Husband.

The fact that a woman murdered her husband does not deprive her of dower rights given her by a statute which provides clearly how they may be lost and does not include murder as one of the reasons for forfeiture. Cases involving the right of one murdering the insured to collect on his insurance policy are not in point as they involve a contract right and the case also differs from that of a devisee who murders the testator. The common-law rule that no one shall take advantage of his own wrong cannot be used to alter or amend the clear terms of a statute.⁴¹

But a statute is valid which denies to one who kills another all right in his property as this act is construed to act upon the interest of the wife before the death of the husband, which interest is not vested and may therefore be changed by the legislature. This act renders the killing itself a disqualification with conviction a condition precedent to the assertion by others of rights adverse to the dower interest.⁴²

§ 1441. Contracts Excluding Dower.

We have seen, however, that antenuptial contracts executed without great formality, but in good faith, are permitted to exclude dower; provisions thus made being respected in equity.⁴³

It is held in New Hampshire that a wife, owning a right of dower in her husband's lands, may properly convey it and take a promissory note of equal value payable to herself; or, owning a promissory note in her own right, secured by mortgage on the husband's estate, may sell and release her interest in such estate, and take a new note payable to herself.⁴⁴ And under modern equity and the married women's acts, the disposition must often be strong to protect the proceeds of a married woman's contingent or inchoate dower in her husband's lands as her separate estate, where her release was upon an intended consideration, and not as a mere favor.⁴⁵ Charging or encumbering her interest thus for her husband's benefit, she does not become a surety for him, or liable upon his mortgage note.⁴⁶ A wife, fraudulently induced by the grantee to join in conveying her husband's lands, to the loss of her inchoate rights of dower, has a right, under some recent married women's acts, to sue, during marriage, for the injury done her.⁴⁷ If, however, a wife fails to exact special consideration for executing her release with her husband, consideration to him alone will suffice.⁴⁸ Where a consideration is exacted, it is her separate estate.⁴⁹

§ 1442. Widow's Election Between Contract and Dower.

A widow is usually required to elect between the contract and dower.⁵⁰ A wife's election to take under such a contract will bar her dower in any event.⁵¹ Such an election cannot be made orally.⁵² § 1443. Widow's Election Between Provisions of Husband's Will and Dower.

It is the accepted rule in this country that the widow must elect between her dower rights and provisions made for her under her husband's will.⁵³ Thus, statutes frequently provide that she may elect between other provision made for her in her husband's will and her right to dower, within reasonable time after her husband's death; this doctrine assuming that under all the special circumstances the two rights are to be construed as incompatible, and that thus the testator intended.⁵⁴ But the husband cannot by his will put the widow to her election as to property vesting in her by survivorship.⁵⁵

A widow claiming her widow's rights in her husband's personality because not mentioned in his will cannot also claim that the will caused an equitable conversion of his real estate as she cannot claim a benefit by reason of being omitted from the will and an additional benefit which can only arise by its provisions.⁵⁶

The wife's privilege is carried even farther in Massachusetts and various other States by a statute which permits the widow to waive a provision made for her by her husband's will, and thereupon to take such portion as the law would have given her had he died intestate.⁵⁷ But this privilege is accorded with some restrictions as to the full amount to be allowed her.⁵⁸

The right on her part becomes complete upon her formal renunciation of the provisions under the will, without any surrender of property under the will.⁵⁹ But her election must be strictly made within the time designated by statute.⁶⁰ And it is to be inferred that the right of election is personal to herself, and cannot be exercised by her representatives or kindred after her death.⁶¹

Where the wife elects to take under her husband's will she is thereby barred as heir from taking a share in the husband's property which is not disposed of by will. The court sees no reason for interpolating this exception into the general rule of election.⁶²

The election of the widow in the State of the domicile to take under the will of her husband binds her in another State in which he held real estate as to which he died intestate. The doctrine of estoppel by election is not a creature of statute but is an equitable doctrine founded upon equitable principles. Therefore she cannot § 1444. Election When Widow Is Insane.

The widow's right of election to take dower rather than under her husband's will is personal to her and ceases at her death. If she becomes insane, however, the better authority is that although her guardian cannot make an election for her still the election may be made by the guardian with the sanction of the court. There is not one law for a sane and another for an insane widow.⁶⁴

An insane widow may have her election as to the will of her husband by a suit in equity by next friend.⁶⁵ The court has in equity jurisdiction of her interests. In deciding the question the court should be guided by the best interests of the widow which does not necessarily mean from a pure monetary viewpoint. Her kinsmen have no right to be considered in the matter. The right of the testator to dispose of her property as he pleases may also be taken into consideration. So where the widow is incurably insane and the will makes ample provision for her care while insane and further provision for her if she recovers the court will elect for her in favor of the will,⁶⁶ although in some States it is held that the right of election is personal to the widow and cannot be exercised by the guardian of an insane widow and if she is insane the right is defeated.⁶⁷

§ 1446. Widow's Allowance.

Another liberal provision made by the legislatures of some American States is that known as the widow's allowance. This is a reasonable sum, such as the Court of Probate may order, as necessaries to the widow for herself and the family, or, if there be no widow, to the minor children. The allowance is set apart as something superior to the claims of general creditors, and is even preferred to the expenses of administration, funeral and last illness of the husband. The amount is at the discretion of the court; and where the husband has died insolvent, leaving few assets, it is not uncommon for the whole of the personal property to be thus awarded to the widow, whereby is afforded an expeditious means of settling perplexing little estates. This right is treated in Massachusetts as personal to the widow, provided she survive her husband; it does not pass to her representatives.⁷⁰ Nor is it considered in the same light as a distributive share; but the amount, if allowed, is generally to be regulated according to the necessitous circumstances of the widow and her family.⁷¹

§ 1447. Inheritance Tax on Widow's Allowance.

The allowance made out of the estate under a statute for the maintenance and support of the widow during administration is not subject to the inheritance tax as it is not treated as part of the estate but as something to be taken out before distribution. The same result is reached in case of the personal property which the widow is allowed to take from the estate before distribution.⁷³ § 1448. The Widow's Paraphernalia.

The widow's paraphernalia is a species of property recognized at the common law, though borrowed from the civilians. It consists of such articles of wearing apparel, personal ornament, and personal convenience as are suitable to a wife's rank and degree, and such as she continued to use during the marriage.⁷³ The term paraphernalia is derived from the Greeks, and transmitted to England through the civil law. But while the wife's paraphernalia at the civil law resembled what we call the wife's separate property, the word itself has a more limited signification in England and America, being confined to personal necessities or ornaments, and having no possible application to real estate. Blackstone says the word signified "something over and above her dower;" whereas, as a late English writer observes, it really meant something of her own, not surrendered by her at her marriage; something reserved and kept back from the dos, or fortune, which she brought her husband.⁷⁴

The common-law doctrine of paraphernalia is this: that the suitable ornaments and wearing apparel of a married woman, which she had at the time of her marriage, or which come to her allowance of a "work horse." As to exemption of this allowance from liability, see Davis v. Davis, 63 Ala. 293. And see King's Appeal, 84 Pa. St. 345.

through her husband before or during coverture, remain his personal property during his life, and he may sell and dispose of them during his life; but such as remain at the time of his death belong thenceforth to her absolutely as her paraphernalia.⁷⁵ It seems that he may even give them away while coverture lasts, in the exercise of his marital rights. For the loss thereof the wife cannot sue alone, but the husband sues as for his own property.⁷⁶ But he certainly cannot bequeath them to his wife; nor on principle dispose of them as donatio causa mortis.⁷⁷

Paraphernalia are therefore to be distinguished from the wife's separate property, which we have considered, inasmuch as her rights are perfected, only when she becomes a widow; while the property is alienable not by herself, but by her husband, during his life.⁷⁸ Such gifts from the husband are further to be distinguished from gifts bestowed solely upon the wife by her father, or by a relative, or even by a stranger. For in the latter instance they would be deemed gifts to her separate use; and then, if received with the husband's consent, neither he nor his creditors could afterwards dispose of them.⁷⁹

Mere ornaments for a parlor are not to be treated as paraphernal property.⁸⁰ Nor can articles be claimed as such which are, in fact, heirlooms.⁸¹ But a gold watch worn by the wife of one who maintains a fair social position may be treated as paraphernal.⁸² A "necessary bed" is paraphernal.⁸³ Jewels purchased by the husband and worn by the wife with her other ornaments, it is said, become her paraphernalia, in absence of evidence to the contrary; while family jewels, by merely being worn by the wife, do not.⁸⁴ Where a piece of jewelry, in possession of the husband at the time of marriage as an heirloom, is greatly enhanced in value by adding new diamonds, and is then given to the wife to wear, though bequeathed to his heirs, the rule, as laid down by Lord Chancellor Macclesfield, is to separate the new diamonds after the husband's death, and bestow them upon the widow as her paraphernalia, leaving the heirs to enjoy the residue.⁸⁵ And the old books say that if the husband delivers cloth to his wife for her apparel, and dies before it is made up, she shall have the cloth.⁸⁶ The question of value is not material in setting off the widow's paraphernalia, so long as the articles are suitable to her degree.⁸⁷ And while the modern cases which turn on such questions are rare, especially in this country, it cannot be doubted that a liberal rule would at this day be applied in the widow's favor.

As to personal ornaments, it seems to be an important element in the title, that the wife should be seen to wear them at intervals. Particularly is this true where the husband kept them in his own possession, for otherwise it might be said that he never gave them to her. But it is enough to establish her claim that he had allowed her to wear them on birthdays or other suitable occasions.⁸⁸

Paraphernalia would seem to be so far personal to the widow, that if not claimed by her during her lifetime, they cannot after her death be demanded by her executor or administrator. Accordingly, it is held that if the husband should bequeath them to her for life and then over, and she should make no election to have them as her paraphernal goods, her representative after her decease would be excluded.⁸⁹ But in a recent English case, not only was the committee of the widow, being a lunatic, permitted to elect in her stead while she remained alive; but upon her subsequent death, her next of kin were allowed to come in and choose whether to take the paraphernalia or the benefits given her under her husband's will; and, upon their choice of the former an order in chancery was made accordingly.⁹⁰

§ 1449. Incidents of Paraphernalia.

The wife's paraphernal property is subject to her husband's debts during his life; for in truth it is not then her property at all.⁹¹ Nor can she maintain an indictment against any one who steals it, while her husband is alive.⁹² So, too, it is liable for his debts after his death, when there is a deficiency of assets in the administrator's hands.⁹³ But even then her necessary clothing is protected; for, in the words of an ancient judicial resolution, "She ought not to be naked or exposed to shame and cold."⁹⁴ And in many of the United States there are at the present day statutes which justly reserve to the widow, in any event, necessities in the house at the time of her husband's death, and the ornaments and clothing of herself and children.⁹⁵ for a sum certain during his absence, this will not be deemed an absolute alienation, but shall stand as a pledge redeemable by the widow; and if the husband have left sufficient to redeem (after payment of all his debts), she is entitled, under the rules of equity, to have the redemption money raised out of his personal estate.⁹⁶ But creditors must first be satisfied in all cases; though the widow's right in respect of such property is superior to that of any legatee of the husband.⁹⁷

Real estate is to be appropriated, in payment of the husband's debts after his death, before the widow's paraphernal property can be held subject to the demands of his creditors. Such at least is the English practice; and where paraphernal property has been used up by the executor or administrator in satisfaction of specialty debts, the widow is allowed, in equity, to stand in their stead to reimburse herself out of the real estate in possession of the heir.⁹⁸ In this country a summary sale of the husband's real estate, under direction of the Probate Court, is usually requisite, where the personal assets in the hands of his executor or administrator prove inadequate to meet the debts, whether by specialty or simple contract.⁹⁹

Letters written to a wife by a former husband belong to her and

96. Graham v. Londonderry, 3 Atk. 393. In Re Harrall, 31 N. J. Eq. 101, this same rule is applied in equity to the guardian of a lunatic husband, who pawned the wife's jewels, while sane, to pay his personal expenses, the lunatic's estate being ample. Here the lunatic was still alive, which makes the case somewhat anomalous; though, semble, a wife's ornaments were here treated as her separate property.

IV., ch. 104, which makes lands of all kinds assets for the payment of debts, the lands are absolutely assets for satisfaction of the widow's claim. Bell Hus. & Wife, 215.

99. An English writer of excellent authority on this subject distinguishes between the case where the devised estate is subject to a charge or trust for the payment of debts not to his estate; and her own gift of them is valid as against the executor of such estate or her second husband.¹

§ 1450. Wife's Equity of Exoneration.

To the wife also belongs the right in equity to have her estate exonerated out of her husband's personal and real assets. This is known as the wife's equity of exoneration. The principle is that the wife, when mortgaging her property for her husband's debt, stands in the position of a surety, and therefore may claim indemnity from the principal for whose benefit her security was interposed.² Lord Hardwicke has announced this rule with clearness and precision.³ The husband's other creditors have no preference over the wife on marshalling the assets of her husband's estate; but she is entitled to the benefit of any securities, and to have satisfaction of her debt according to its rank. But the widow may waive her right of exoneration from the estate of her deceased husband, and her waiver will be inferred from circumstances.⁴

In this country, as we have seen, the wife is regarded as her husband's surety, and the presumptions are in her favor.⁵ The

from the case where the devised estate is not so subjected. In the former case he holds the widow entitled to have the assets marshalled as against the devisee; but not in the latter case. Note by Mr. Jacob to 2 Roper Hus. & Wife, 145. We find no authority to support this distinction. It would certainly trench closely upon her right to hold such property against all bequests of her husband to others; a right which is clearly admitted in the English courts. 2 Bl. Com. 436. A bequest from husband to wife of all the household goods, furniture, plate, jewels, and the like (including what in point of fact are paraphernalia), does not debar the widow from claiming her paraphernal property as such, if she chooses to set up her lawful privilege as against her husband's bequest. Marshall v. Blew, 2 Atk. 217; In re Hewson, 23 E. L. & Eq. 283.

rule as to her equity of redemption is doubtless quite as liberal as that laid down by Lord Redesdale in England. Perhaps it is more so, but authoritative cases on this point are wanting, and recent statutes affect the whole subject. In New York the widow's right of exoneration is expressly admitted.⁶ And in other States the wife's rights as surety, with reference to debts of her late husband, for which she has mortgaged her land, are very strongly favored.⁷

Where the property mortgaged is the wife's separate land, not only must her right to exoneration be a strong one,⁸ but the presumption in her favor as to retaining the equity of redemption to herself must be well nigh conclusive, unless it is apparent that she intentionally surrendered her right, and for a fair equivalent.⁹ In general, as to the wife's separate property or its income, where the circumstances do not warrant the inference of her assent or acquiescence to the appropriation thereof by her husband, or in his mode of applying it, she may claim reimbursement out of his estate.¹⁰

§ 1451. Widow's Right and Duty to Bury Husband.

The common-law obligation of the widow to bury her deceased husband rests upon weaker foundations than the corresponding obligation of the husband. In truth it seems somewhat inconsistent with the doctrine of coverture; for why, it may be asked, should a woman answer for the indigence of one whose lawful privilege it was to strip her of her own means of support? Where the husband leaves an estate, the funeral expenses are to be paid by his executor or administrator, and not by his widow. This is the rule both in England and America; and it is doubtless reasonable so far as it goes.¹¹ But in an English case, decided not many years ago, the court seemed to regard this subject somewhat differently, and intimated that husband and wife should stand upon a like footing as regarded the obligation of burying one another.¹² Here a widow, who was also an infant, was held bound by her contract for the expense of her husband's interment. The decision proceeded upon the ingenious doctrine that, since a husband ought to bury his wife and lawful children, who are the personæ conjunctæ with him, as a matter of personal benefit to himself, the wife should do the same by her husband, as a benefit and comfort to herself; and therefore that the case comes within the rule of law which makes a contract good where the infant is a gainer by it. If the husband's estate is sufficient, it ought to bear the expense of his burial.

§ 1452. Quarantine.

The Magna Charta of Henry III, which established and defined the rule of dower for future guidance, besides relieving the widow of certain burdens imposed upon heirs at the feudal law, distinctly set forth the proportion of which she should be endowed in her husband's lands, and further provided that she might tarry forty days after her husband's death in her husband's house.¹³ This last privilege has been since known as the widow's quarantine, and has been recognized by statute law in some of the United States.¹⁴ It was designed manifestly as something preliminary to the assignment of dower; and some statutes attach this explicit sense to the privilege.

§ 1453. Homestead System in the United States.

The homestead may properly be considered in connection with dower; for although this right is not strictly personal to married women, inasmuch as it exists for the benefit of both wife and children, if not for the husband besides, while he lives, it is an encumbrance upon the real estate of the husband which is generally released by the wife in connection with her dower. The homestead system is of recent origin, is peculiar to our American States, and exists for protection mainly against the husband's creditors. The policy on which it rests, by no means a new one in our legislation, is that a householder with a family shall always have a place of shelter where legal process cannot reach him. While open to some serious objections as concerns the rights of creditors, the homestead system is to be warmly commended in respect of the encouragement it affords to agriculture, and still more as offering rewards for domestic fidelity.¹⁵ § 1455. Desertion by Husband.

Homestead provisions should be liberally construed in the interest of the family home so long as they are not made an instrument of fraud on creditors. Where the husband has absconded, deserting his wife and leaving her residing in the State with children depending upon her, the wife is the head of the family within the meaning of the homestead exemption laws.²³

The mere fact that a husband abandons his wife does not give her the right to make a deed of his homestead land without his signature, and does not estop him from claiming as against the grantees under the wife's deed who took in the belief that the wife was unmarried. To create an estoppel there must be some act on the part of the husband leading the grantees to think that the wife was unmarried, and a mere wrongful abandonment is not enough.²⁴

§ 1456. Desertion by Wife.

Where the Constitution provides that the homestead shall not be sold without the consent of the wife, a deed made by the husband alone is void, even though the wife has voluntarily left the husband. The court has no right to engraft an exception on the Constitution.²⁵ § 1457. Marshaling Assets to Pay Liens.

Where husband and wife are occupying certain property as a homestead, and on his death his widow continues to occupy it, she is entitled to have set off to her one-third in value of the land so as to include the residence and buildings, and the mortgages should be paid out of the proceeds of the remaining two-thirds. policy of the law is to protect the homestead in so far as such may be done without lessening the superior rights of creditors.²⁶ § 1458. Insurable Interests.

Under statutes giving the wife certain interests in the homestead property, the title to which is in the husband, she has an insurable interest in it,²⁷ and the husband has an insurable interest in the homestead standing in the name of the wife.²⁸ § 1459. Remarriage by Widow.

Homestead rights given by statute to a "widow" should be liberally construed, and are not confined to the woman until she marries again, but her rights are retained even although she does marry again. A widow is a person who has outlived her husband, and this case follows the general rule that whenever a right by law attaches by reason of a person being a widow, that right remains unless taken away by statute.²⁹

A wife does not lose her homestead rights under her first husband by moving to other lands which she occupies as a homestead with her second husband, renting the first homestead, and she does not lose the right to claim under her second homestead by the fact that she has other interests in real estate, whether acquired from a former husband or not.³⁰

HISTORY OF DIVORCE.

SECTION 1460. History of Divorce.

1461. Divorce as Known to the Ancients.

1462. Jewish and Christian Views of Divorce.

1463. Diversity of Divorce Laws in England and America.

1464. Divorce Among Modern Christian Nations.

§ 1460. History of Divorce.

There has been divorce in some form since the dawn of history. Under the Mosaic law the husband could write the wife a bill of divorcement and send her away, and she could go and become another man's wife. (Deuteronomy, chapter 24.) About the beginning of the Christian era there arose two famed schools of the law at Jerusalem. One, under Shammai, taught that divorce was unlawful except for adultery; the more popular one, under Hillel, authorized divorce for any cause. With the early Romans divorce was at the will of the husband, and later, upon the agreement of the parties. In more modern times in all civilized countries divorce has been subject to the limitations or consent of the State or church in control. In England, at the time of the secession of the colonies and for a long time previously, divorce from bed and board had been allowed by the ecclesiastical courts, and absolute divorces to a favored few by special acts of Parliament. Otherwise divorces were not granted at common law, and there was no general act of Parliament authorizing them and no jurisdiction in the chancery or common-law courts to grant divorces until eighty-one years after the Declaration of Independence.

As there were no ecclesiastical courts in this country, divorces were granted by special act of the legislature, and later, in most States, under general statutory provisions. As Congress has only such powers as are specifically granted or implied under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and as there is no inherent or inherited power in the courts of this country to grant divorces, it follows that our tribunals have no jurisdiction or authority in regard to divorces except such as may be conferred upon them by the legislature.³¹

§ 1461. Divorce as Known to the Ancients.

The ancient nations, all recognizing the necessity of some divorce legislation, differed in their methods of treatment. Among the Greeks, despite their intellectual refinement, the marriage institution was degraded, even in the palmyest days of Athens. The husband could send away his wife, and the wife could leave her husband. The procedure in such cases was quite simple, being apparently nothing more than a formal notice filed with the judicial magistrate, unless the parties were disposed to contend; in which case they went to trial. If they agreed to be divorced, that would be enough; hence the law was in their own hands; and, if divorced, they might marry again at pleasure.³² In Rome, more of the moral and religious element prevailed; and so strictly was marriage respected in the early days, that no divorce is supposed to have occurred for more than five hundred years from the foundation of the city; if, indeed, we may fix the year of such foundation. The first recorded instance is, however, that of Spurius Carvilius Ruga, B. C. 231; and even this was a case of barrenness, which hence fell possibly under the modern head of void and voidable marriages.³³ But ancient Rome was built on family discipline, rather than domestic love; the husband exercised full sway, and the stately and somewhat severe Roman matron, who developed under influences at first adverse in appearance, disappeared entirely in the later dissolute and corrupt years of the Roman republic, and before an empire succeeded it.³⁴ § 1462. Jewish and Christian Views of Divorce.

The ideal of marriage among the Hebrews was high: that husband and wife should cleave together and be one flesh; nevertheless, the usage of this nation, founded upon the Mosaic code, permitted the husband, as it would seem, to dismiss his wife at pleasure.³⁵

It was this latter custom which called forth the merited rebuke of Christ, and occasioned him more than once to suggest a higher standard of marital constancy. These suggestions many have construed into an absolute prohibition of divorce except for the cause of adultery. Without accepting this construction of Scripture as the true one, or admitting all of the forced conclusions of commentators, which, whether correct or incorrect, must ever remain a matter for unsettled controversy,³⁶ we may clearly trace in the 35. Deut. xxiv.; Woolsey Div. 24.

36. For the discussion of this question the reader is referred to Woolsey Div. 51 et seq., where it will be perceived that writers on these New Testament texts are diametrically opposed to one another. The passages important to the issue are Matt. v. 31, 32; xix. 3-9; Mark x. 2-12; Luke xvi. 18. The present writer merely reminds strict constructionists of that well-known instance, which, though Biblical scholars may discard, laymen still believe authentic, where Christ refused to cast a stone at the adulterous woman, and bade her go and sin no more, as evincing that the great Christian Teacher had no design of ingrafting his code of morals, as a mere amendment, upon the Mosaic

New Testament writings an intent to bring into prominence the moral obligations of the marriage state, to discountenance lax and temporary unions, and to warn the legislator that those whom God hath joined man may not with impunity put asunder for any trivial cause.

§ 1463. Diversity of Divorce Laws in England and America.

Divorce laws have constantly given rise to most interesting and earnest discussions; and men differ very widely in their conclusions, while all admit the subject to be of the most vital importance to the peace of families and the welfare of nations. Some favor a rigid divorce system as most conducive to the moral health of the people; others urge a lax system on the same grounds. On two points only do English and American jurists seem to agree: first, that the government has the right to dissolve a marriage during the lifetime of both parties, provided the reasons are weighty; second, that, unless those reasons are weighty, husband and wife should be divorced only by the hand of death.

§ 1464. Divorce Among Modern Christian Nations.

The influence of Christianity has been felt in modern Europe; spreading to England, whence, too, it was brought to the wilds of America; the Christian rule ever shaping the policy of government. But this rule has received different methods of interpretation.³⁷ The Church of Rome treats marriage as a sacrament, and indissoluble without a special dispensation, even for adultery. Protestants are divided; all regarding adultery as a sufficient divorce law; which, as we understand it, would then have signified that a husband might "put away" his wife for adultery and have her stoned to death; that the wife could get no divorce at all; and that government was not concerned in the matter. Even Dr. Woolsey seems compelled to admit that St. Paul sanctioned divorce for desertion. See his comments (p. 70 et seq.) upon 1 Cor. vii. 15. While it may well be doubted whether the New Testament prescribes an inflexible code to bind all legislators, it is clear that all approach to "free marriage" is therein discountenanced.

cause of divorce, many considering desertion equally so, others cruelty; while a strong current of authority in this country tends to multiply the legal occasions for divorce even down to such pretexts as incompatibility of temper.³⁸ So loose, indeed, and so confusing, is our State marriage and divorce legislation becoming, that it might be well to ask whether the cause of morality would not be promoted if, by constitutional amendment, the whole subject were placed in the control of the general government; so that, at least, one uniform system could be applied, and the experiments of well-meaning reformers be subjected to an unerring and crucial test.³⁹

We have already commented upon the growing laxity of marriage in the United States as a civil institution. Here the moralist is confronted with two serious difficulties: first, in our universal tendency to greater social freedom as between the sexes, women themselves pressing for it; second, in the existence of thirty or forty distinct and independent jurisdictions over matters pertaining to marriage and divorce. Citizens of this Union, traveling readily from one State to another, find facilities for divorce and re-marriage always at hand; for sham divorce and sham re-marriage, perhaps, but for divorce and re-marriage sufficient to keep guilty parties in countenance, and perplex the tribunals which must apply the law.

An era of social and political revolution, such as the American people have lately passed through, is often succeeded by one conservative or slightly reactionary, just as the top gyrates in narrower circles when it steadies itself. But at the present rate, and in the present direction, there is danger lest the sanction of the courts to marriage and divorce be practically superseded during the next century by private discretion and individualism. It has

39. This for-sighted suggestion of the learned author was written more than thirty years ago and the subject is coming to be more and more of pressing importance. There is now a well-organized movement on foot to accomplish the same result by the passage of uniform divorce laws in the different States.—Editor.

been affirmed of our republic, and correctly, that "a nation of Mormons would be impossible, but not so one of libertines." ⁴⁰

40. A writer in the International Review, August, 1881, shows how a man may, under the present conflict of divorce laws in the several United States, acquire by the complications of domicile, a number of wives, all lawful in a certain sense, and yet, of course, in strict truth, unlawful.

On the continent of Europe a similar confusion may be found, as, for instance, between France and Switzerland. As for Switzerland, according to a writer in the London Guardian, not only may a man thus have two lawful wives, but divorce is obtainable in that country by mutual consent; albeit this facility arises rather from the practice of the courts than from the letter of the law, which is to the effect that when the judge is of opinion that there are circumstances "which render the life in common insupportable," he may, on the joint application of a married couple, dissolve their marriage. The practice of the courts being to regard a joint demand for divorce as a circumstance that renders life in common insupportable, divorce is practically procured by mutual consent. This writer adds that people in Switzerland, especially among the working classes, take each other on trial; the expressed understanding being that, after a certain time, if they do not get on well together, or desire a change, they shall join in an application for divorce. London Guardian, August, 1881.

§ 1465. Judicial in Nature.

The proceedings are judicial in their nature, and a divorce can be granted only for sufficient cause and after the other party has been given a sufficient chance to defend.⁴¹

Proceedings for divorce are civil cases and should be conducted like other civil cases in the absence of a statute to the contrary,⁴² but are in many respects sui generis.⁴³

The courts alone have authority to decree a divorce, and no divorce or separation ordered or allowed under the rules of any church can have any effect whatever.⁴⁴

§ 1466. Whether at Law or in Equity.

Divorce proceedings are commonly at law,⁴⁵ and actions for divorce are statutory purely, except that where the statute is silent the rules of equity are followed,⁴⁶ and the court may apply equitable principles.⁴⁷

In some States the courts in divorce cases are governed by the rules of the ecclesiastical courts.⁴⁸

§ 1467. Whether in Rem or in Personam.

An action for divorce is commonly said to be in rem,⁴⁹ but where the defendant appears and joins issue by answer the nature of the proceeding is thereby changed from a proceeding in rem to one in personam.⁵⁰ § 1468. Right to Divorce Based on Statute Alone.

When the American colonies adopted the common law they did not adopt the ecclesiastical law relating to divorce, so that no American court has jurisdiction to grant divorce apart from statute,⁵¹ and jurisdiction over divorce is purely statutory, and every power exercised by the courts with reference to it must be found in the statutes or it does not exist.⁵²

The legislature may prescribe the grounds on which divorces may be granted and the conditions as to residence of parties and limitations of action as it deems necessary.⁵³

The authority given to grant divorce, though statutory, carries with it such powers as are expressly given and such as may be incidental to its exercise.⁵⁴

§ 1469. Special Legislation Valid.

Proceedings for divorce are special in nature and special legislation as to them will be valid.⁵⁵

A provision that one year's residence in the State is necessary to give the court jurisdiction in divorce is not void as a special law, as it is well settled that reasonable classifications in a legislative act are not inimical to constitutional provisions against the passage of special laws.⁵⁶

§ 1470. Legislative Divorces in England.

All private agreements between the married parties to dissolve their relation are void in England and the United States, being contrary to the fundamental principle, long cherished by Christian nations, that government must interpose whenever a conjugal dissolution is sought. We are led, moreover, to regard the legislature as prescribing the rules and defining the policy of divorce, while the courts, on the other hand, apply those rules and that policy to such cases as may arise. But the legislature itself may dissolve a particular marriage, just as it may provide for the dissolution of marriage generally; for private or special acts are, like public statutes, within the recognized province of legislation.

The English Parliament, whose functions may be pronounced omnipotent within English jurisdiction, used, in fact, to pass special acts of divorce upon private petition for a long period prior to 1858; inasmuch as the ecclesiastical courts steadily refused from 1601, if not earlier, to divorce parties from the bond of matrimony, whatever the cause alleged, and decreeing nothing more than a legal separation from bed and board upon just cause. This ecclesiastical decree affording to the injured little consolation, and requiring an innocent party to curb natural appetites more than ever, husbands whose wives were guilty of adultery began to apply to Parliament to declare their infelicitous marriage dissolved, and in 1669, as it appears, the first prayer of this kind was granted, the petitioner having previously procured a decree of separation in the spiritual court.⁵⁷ It is observable that this expensive and tedious process was practically confined, during the seventeenth century, to three injured persons, and they members of the British peerage; that during some one hundred and seventy years after the system of parliamentary divorce was established, the remedy was never awarded and probably never sought without some charge of adultery as a basis; and that while an innocent husband might thus be set free from an adulterous wife, almost as of course, an innocent wife could not so readily cast off the legal companionship of an adulterous husband.⁵⁸ Later still, the English divorce statutes of 1858 have practically dispensed with the legislative divorce for special cases, which divorce had always been cautiously granted.

§ 1471. Legislative Divorces in This Country.

Legislative divorces are not unknown in American States; though, as Mr. Bishop says, the practice, which was imported from England, prevailed here more in earlier times than at present. Sometimes the local legislature has administered its remedies concurrently with the courts; sometimes it has divorced from bed and board, though more commonly from the bonds of matrimony; sometimes its act has operated dissolution at once, and sometimes referred the case to some judicial tribunal for full investigation and proper action.⁵⁹

Divorce might formerly be granted by the Governor and Council in the Colony days,⁶⁰ and it was for a long period quite customary for divorces to be granted by the legislature, and such divorces have been sustained by our highest courts,⁶¹ even when granted without notice to the libellee.⁶² The practice is now, however, universally discontinued.

Objectionable as the legislative method is, from its cumbersomeness, cost, and the little real opportunity for an impartial hearing before such a body, we may regard it as perfectly legal in American States, unless constitutional objections apply; objections which of course are inapplicable to an English Parliament.

As to constitutional objections, decisions differ in different States, like the provisions of different State constitutions. But it may be fairly affirmed that no objection is tenable under the Constitution of the United States as to legislative divorces, such divorces impairing no "obligation of contracts," words which, in the rational sense of that instrument, have no reference to the family status.⁶³ Nor, to cite objections under the language of State constitutions, ought a legislative divorce to be pronounced invalid as a "retrospective law."⁶⁴ Nor, according to the better reasoning, is it void as an exercise of judicial power; though the separation of executive, legislative, and judiciary, is not, we may add, prescribed for in all States in terms identical, and such divorces were early condemned as an assumption of judicial power.⁶⁵ But as to this exercise of judicial power where a State constitution expressly prohibits the legislature from granting divorces,⁶⁶ or (to take the judicial standpoint) where the court may say that divorces for such a cause, or for all causes, come exclusively under their own jurisdiction,⁶⁷ or that a legislative divorce in the particular instance would amount to interference with a suit already pending properly before the courts;⁶⁸ here there may be found warrant for treating a legislative divorce as null and void. Where, under existing laws, the State court has no jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage, a legislative divorce has been pronounced good, there being no constitutional clause to the contrary.⁶⁹ But where the State constitution forbids special laws a special act granting a divorce is unconstitutional.⁷⁰

§ 1472. Effect of Legislative Divorce on Property Rights.

But the effect of a legislative divorce is in this country considerably restrained by constitutional law. As a State legislature cannot divest vested rights by any statute, neither is it permitted to impose alimony or take from the vested rights of one spouse in order to bestow property upon the other.⁷¹ As the spouses thus divorced are, however, no longer enabled to fulfil the condition of widow or widower, it is considered, in conformity with the usual rule, that after a legislative divorce the divorced husband cannot become a complete tenant by the curtesy of his late wife's lands; nor the divorced wife, if she survive, take dower on the widow's allowance, since this would be no divesting of vested rights.⁷² § 1473. Legislative Interference with Judicial Divorce.

It is an unwarrantable exercise of legislative authority to interfere with the status of existing judicial sentences of divorce. As, for instance, in Massachusetts, where a statute of 1874 provided, in contravention of the constitutional right of the courts to determine divorce causes, that all divorces nisi heretofore decreed under a statute of 1870 should "have the force and effect of absolute divorces from the bonds of matrimony."⁷³ But a statute modifying the remedy, where no judicial decree has been rendered before, is constitutional.⁷⁴ § 1474. Necessity of Separate Proceedings.

An action for an absolute divorce cannot be combined with a prayer for a limited divorce,⁷⁵ or with proceedings for separation,⁷⁶

but in Louisiana a decree for separation must precede an application for divorce based on abandonment.⁷⁷

In some States a cause of action for adultery cannot be joined with one for cruelty.⁷⁸

Proceedings for divorce cannot be joined with proceedings relating to property rights not growing out of the marriage relation.⁷⁹

§ 1475. No Specific Performance of Marriage.

The principle of enforcing the specific performance of marriage vows, though perhaps theoretically commendable, proves in practice utterly futile, as was seen in the ecclesiastical remedy for restitution of conjugal rights, which fell into disrepute in England and was never permitted in this country, and there is no judicial power in this country to compel husbands and wives to live together.⁸⁰

The English suit for restitution of conjugal rights does not proceed, in these times, to the point of compelling copulation, by direct or indirect means of coercion, though under the old canon law the rule may have been otherwise, but the obstinate offender is simply imprisoned for contempt.⁸¹

§ 1476. Judicial Divorce; Grounds; Divorce from Bed and Board and from Bonds of Matrimony.

Divorce is usually, however, in these days, a matter of judicial cognizance and sentence, as the proper investigation of such painful controversies fairly demands. The leading ground of divorce is adultery; besides which, desertion, cruelty, and kindred offences are frequently recognized as sufficient; and these kindred offences are greatly multiplied by statute in many of the United States.

Divorce by a court may be granted from bed and board (a mensa et thoro), or from the bonds of matrimony (a vinculo); the former, which is a sort of judicial separation, being applied to the less heinous offences; while the latter, which alone is complete, is the remedy for the greater offences; or, according to the most conservative policy, for adultery only. The one is partial divorce; the other final and full divorce. Divorce from bed and board, or a mensa et thoro, is sometimes called a separation; and the new English divorce act (Stat. 20 & 21 Vict., c. 85, § 7) provides that instead of the former decree, the court shall pronounce for a "judicial separation," with the same force and consequences as the divorce a mensa et thoro formerly had.

Where the legislative grant of divorce for enumerated causes, and of divorce jurisdiction to the courts, is in terms permissive only, courts will incline to exercise a judicial discretion in accordance with the policy of the statute, and to withhold a judgment of divorce in cases not found to be within the benefits of the statute on their true merits;⁸² and a husband may sue for separation as well as a wife.⁸³

Divorces from bed and board and divorces from bonds of matrimony are similar as to the mode of procedure down to the pronouncing of the sentence, from which point they differ, being dissimilar in consequences.

§ 1477. Election by the Aggrieved Spouse as Between the Different Kinds of Divorce.

A spouse who is bent upon obtaining a divorce for the misconduct of the other rarely fails to petition for the fullest divorce. Yet property considerations, or possibly a lingering affection, might cause one to act otherwise; and such a discretion is sometimes permitted. Thus, in England, the new divorce act allows a party who is entitled to a divorce from the bond of matrimony to obtain, at choice, a decree for a judicial separation instead.⁸⁴ A similar right of election is permissively exercised under some American statutes.⁸⁵ In some States, again, the court itself is empowered to use discretion, by which we mean a judicial, and not an arbitrary discretion, as to making the divorce full or partial.⁸⁶ But while it is not uncommon for our local statute to permit the party once divorced from bed and board, upon his petition and for suitable cause, to obtain afterwards a divorce, upon a lapse of time specified, from bonds of matrimony, the general rule of American States where both kinds of divorce obtain is that the statute itself must determine whether, in the first instance, divorce shall be from bed and board or from bond of matrimony; while the former kind is in a sense to be regarded as preliminary to the other.

⁸² Dutcher v. Dutcher, 39 Wis. 651.

⁸³ Morris v. Morris, 177 N. Y. S. 600.

§ 1478. The Public as a Party in Divorce Suits.

Out of the interest which the State takes in supporting the marriage institution, and the rights of helpless offspring who may rise to become its responsible citizens, springs what Mr. Bishop calls "a triangular suit, sui generis," whenever proceedings for divorce are instituted. The divorce suit, in other words, becomes not a controversy between plaintiff and defendant alone (else divorce might be procured through their collusion, and they in effect dissolve their own marriage at pleasure); but government or the public is a third party, whose interests the court feels bound to protect. Usually, however, the divorce court is left to protect the interests of the State without professional aid, and decides in pursuance of such a trust. We are, therefore, constrained to regard modern divorce procedure as something peculiar; not criminal, in its character, even though a penal prohibition to the guilty party were a result, but a civil suit, sounding in tort, seeking to redress a private wrong, while at the same time attracting the government or public besides the parties of record. "What the government does," says Mr. Bishop, "is, first, to protect the rights of persons not before the court, but liable to be affected by the decree or sentence; secondly, to guard the interests of the public as to its morals; and, thirdly and chiefly, to see that the status of its subjects, who are the parties of record, and sometimes their children, is properly determined or established."⁸⁷

For government does not concern itself with divorcing those who are minded to be reconciled and live on together, to which intent the party plaintiff is always free to discontinue the suit or bar himself.⁸⁸ But it denies all private right to procure a divorce for insufficient cause or by collusion, and requires that the plaintiff's case be made out with the same burden of proof, even though the defendant should default or consent to the divorce;⁸⁹ and this, not so as to lighten the defendant's disadvantage in respect to costs, alimony, and the like, but because the public conscience must be satisfied, irrespective of the private individuals, that there was justice in the complainant's case.⁹⁰

The State is interested as a matter of public safety in the continuation and protection of the marriage state, and therefore in all divorce suits,⁹¹ and the court must take care that divorces

An action for divorce is not a mere controversy between the private parties, but the State is interested as an adverse party so far as to oppose the granting of a divorce unless a

are not granted by suppression of evidence or collusion of parties.⁹²

No married person has a legal right to a divorce, since the marriage relation is a status fixed by law, which can only be dissolved by consent of the State, for causes deemed to make probable the better service of the interests of society thereby.⁹³

§ 1479. Contracts or Other Proceedings Encouraging Divorces Illegal.

It is against public policy to encourage divorce,⁹⁴ and the maintenance of the family relation is so important from the public standpoint that no acts inducing or tending towards its dissolution are countenanced, and an attorney who advertises for divorce cases with a promise of speedy and successful termination is subject to disbarment or suspension.⁹⁵

Where a man gave a note with a stipulation on it that it was conditioned on the payees, who were attorneys, obtaining a divorce from the maker for his wife within six months, the note is void as given for an illegal consideration, and no recovery will be allowed on it. If the object of the contract is to divorce man and wife the agreement is against public policy and void. The reason of this rule is that the law views with repugnance all contracts the purpose or direct tendency of which, as gathered from its terms, is to dissolve the marriage tie, because of its regard for virtue, the case is made within the rules prescribed by the statute. Franklin v. Franklin, 40 Mont. 348, 106 P. 353.

good order of society, the welfare of the children as the fruit of the union, and the peculiar sanctity of the marital relation.⁹⁶

The law will not tolerate any contract which has by its terms or obvious tendency the object of securing a divorce, and for the same reason any contract is void which provides for payment for procuring testimony where the payment is contingent on success in the divorce litigation. Such a contract is calculated to induce false charges and the production of perjured testimony, to subvert truth and justice, through fraud, trickery and chicanery at the hands of unscrupulous private detectives or other conscienceless persons, and this fact has impelled the law with wisdom to declare such contracts illegal. But there is nothing illegal in an agreement to examine into the conduct of a libellant in a divorce suit and report the facts as found with a view to defend the suit, where compensation is not conditioned on success or failure of the defence or in the production of any particular testimony, and such an agreement may be enforced by suit for compensation.⁹⁷ § 1480. Discontinuance of Action for Nullity May Be Refused.

In suits for annulment of the marriage or in divorce suits where the validity of the marriage is brought in question the public is interested in the status of the marriage, involving, as it may, the validity of subsequent marriages and the legitimacy of offspring, and therefore the court may in its discretion refuse to allow a petitioner to discontinue an action for nullity of a marriage.⁹⁸

§ 1481. Jurisdiction Dependent on Statute.

Jurisdiction to grant divorce exists to-day only as provided by statute,¹ and the power to grant a divorce is not within the general equity jurisdiction of courts of equity,² but divorces are granted in equity in some States.³

A statute giving a court power to decree divorces gives it no power to decree a legal separation, as a separation was the decree granted by the ecclesiastical courts, and the ecclesiastical law was not adopted in this country as part of the common law.⁴

General statutes authorizing change of venue of civil actions may be held to apply to divorce,¹⁰ but a statute providing for venue in divorce actions will override a general venue statute.¹¹ In divorce questions of venue are not waived by failure to plead them.¹²

§ 1483. Place of Marriage or of Offence.

Usually the place of marriage¹³ and of the offence are not of consequence,¹⁴ although in some States divorce will be granted only where the cause for divorce occurred.¹⁵

The fact of marriage within the State is not enough to give jurisdiction of divorce,¹⁶ and a divorce may be granted although the marriage was outside the State if sufficient domicile of the parties appears.¹⁷

Under some statutes domicile for the statutory period is unnecessary if the acts complained of took place in the State,¹⁸ but where the acts complained of took place outside of the State domicile must be relied on.¹⁹ § 1484. Consent or Failure to Plead Jurisdiction.

It is axiomatic that the consent of the parties is not enough to give jurisdiction.²⁰ The court must itself inquire into the jurisdictional facts of domicile,²¹ and a mere failure to plead lack of jurisdiction does not give the court any basis whatever for granting a divorce. The court remarks in a recent case: "A holding that the failure of the defendant to plead in abatement . . . would bar the latter from objecting to the jurisdiction of this court, and would bar the court from any inquiry and decision upon the question of jurisdiction, would set a precedent which would open wide the door to fraud upon the jurisdiction of the courts of the State, and would make it another resort for those who are impatient of delay in throwing off and eager to be rid of their marriage ties, which would bring about the very mischiefs which our statutory requirement as to domicile in cases of suits for divorce was meant to obviate. Thus would the statute itself be rendered nugatory in this important particular."²² § 1485. Appearance.

Appearance in defence will cure all imperfections as to notice, though it cannot create a jurisdiction which was already wanting, and jurisdiction will not appear from the mere fact of an appearance by the defendant where neither party is domiciled in the

The addition of third parties as garnishees or otherwise will not give the court jurisdiction.²⁵

§ 1487. Co-respondent.

A co-respondent may appear although not a resident, and the court will thereby acquire jurisdiction of him.²⁶ According to a recent English decision, where a divorce was rendered in India, and the co-respondent was served only by registered mail, and a money judgment was rendered against him, this judgment is valid and can be enforced in the jurisdiction of his domicile.²⁷

Where the spouses are residents of different States there is a res in each State which may be the subject-matter of suit,²⁹ and the married state continues after separation within the jurisdiction of the husband authorizing the court to proceed in the absence of the wife.³⁰

§ 1489. Domicile of Parties.

Residence of the parties is jurisdictional in a divorce suit,³¹ and the courts of one State cannot usually fix the status of citizens of another.³² is required in Alabama, Connecticut, and the District of Columbia. In Massachusetts a residence of five years is required, unless the parties were inhabitants at the time of marriage and libellant has lived in the State three years. A residence of six months is required in Idaho. Louisiana has a provision in relation to marriages having been solemnized in the State. In Delaware bona fide residence is required, and divorces are not granted if the cause accrued in another State, and petitioner was a non-resident at the time, unless for limited causes recognized by the laws of the State. In 1895 the constitution of South Carolina was amended to provide that divorces shall not be allowed. In Texas formerly only six months' residence was required; but an amendment in 1913 provided that twelve months' residence in the State and six months in the county where suit is brought are necessary.

A residence of one year is required in Colorado unless the act was committed in the State, or one of the parties resided in the State at the time; three years in Connecticut, unless the cause arose after removal to the State; in Illinois one year, unless the offence was committed in the State; in Kentucky one year, unless the act was committed while the plaintiff was a resident of the State; in Maine one year, unless the plaintiff resided in the State when the cause accrued, or the parties were married in the State; in Michigan there must be a residence of two years if the cause arose out of the State; in Minnesota one year, except where adultery was committed in the State; in Massachusetts one year, unless both parties are domiciled in the State or service had been made on the defendant in the State; in Missouri one year, unless the act was committed in the State or while one of the parties resided in the State; and in Porto Rico one year, unless the act was committed while one of the parties resided there; in Nebraska two years' residence is required if the cause arose out of the State.⁴⁴ § 1493. Computation of Required Time of Residence.

The time required must be a residence for the required time preceding the filing of the original libel, and it is not enough to show a residence for that period immediately preceding the filing of an amended libel,⁴⁵ and residence of the parties within the State for one year means continuing until the time of separation.⁴⁶

Where one files a complaint for divorce before he has been in the State the required period, and later files a cross-petition after the lapse of the required time, the court has jurisdiction of the cross-petition.⁴⁷ § 1494. Constitutionality of Statute Requiring Residence for Certain Period.

A statute requiring that the plaintiff be domiciled in the State for a certain period before the bringing of suit for divorce is constitutional.⁴⁸ So an act requiring one year's residence in the State to give the court jurisdiction of a divorce petition is not void as in violation of the Federal Constitution requiring States to give citizens of each State equal privileges and immunities and the equal protection of the laws. Such a requirement is merely a classification of a character that is common in this country. It applies the same in all parts of the State and the same to all persons under similar circumstances.⁴⁹

An act entitled "An Act to Amend an Act Entitled 'An Act Relating to Marriage and Divorce'" contains a title sufficiently broad to cover an amendment creating a requirement of one year's residence in certain cases where both parties were not residents of the State in order to give the court jurisdiction of a divorce action.⁵⁰ § 1495. Whether Statute Requiring Residence for Certain Time Is Retroactive.

An amendment lengthening the time of residence for jurisdiction for divorce applies to a case where the cause of divorce existed before the passage of the amendment. If it is a matter of practice it is clearly valid, and if it is a matter of substance it is not inimical to provisions prohibiting laws impairing the obligation of contracts, as marriage is not a contract but a statute.⁵¹

§ 1496. Domicile of Defendant.

Where the parties have separated action may be brought in the domicile of the defendant,⁵² but where the statute requires residence for a certain period by the plaintiff the fact that the defendant resides in the jurisdiction where action is brought is not enough.⁵³

CHAPTER V.

WHAT CONSTITUTES DOMICILE IN DIVORCE.

SECTION 1497. Domicile in General.

- 1498. Residence Equivalent to Domicile.
- 1499. Permanent and Temporary Location.
- 1500. Temporary Absence.
- 1501. Change of Domicile.
- 1502. Domicile Not in Good Faith.

- 1508. Effect on Husband of Divorce at Wife's Separate Domicile.
- 1509. Estoppel to Deny Domicile.
- 1510. Proof of Domicile.

§ 1497. Domicile in General.

Every person must in law be domiciled somewhere because every person owes some duties to society and has some obligations to perform to the government which affords him protection, which duties cannot be laid aside at will. Domicile is imposed on one at birth, and though a man may, on arriving at legal age, choose the place where it shall be, it is not at his option whether he shall be without any. With regard to residence or home it is entirely different. This is a matter of privilege exclusively.⁵⁴

The domicile of a man will usually be in the place where he votes.⁵⁵ A citizen of the State may be one foreign born who had duly declared his intention to become a citizen.⁵⁶

⁵⁶ Cairns v. Cairns, 29 Colo. 260, 68 P. 233, 93 Am. St. R. 55.

§ 1498. Residence Equivalent to Domicile.

The requirement of residence is equivalent to "domicile,"⁵⁷ and "residence" means legal residence or domicile.⁵⁸

§ 1499. Permanent and Temporary Location.

Residence does not appear without some permanent location,⁵⁹ and is not satisfied by a mere temporary stopping in the jurisdiction.⁶⁰ So a libellant cannot claim to be a resident of the State when she has not lived in the State for over twelve years, and was married to the libellee in another country.⁶¹

And where a man breaks up housekeeping on account of the adultery of his wife and lives in different places, where he works and retains no fixed place of abode in the town where he and his wife formerly lived, and has merely a general intention of returning there, the court of this town has no jurisdiction to entertain his application for divorce as he has no domicile there.⁶²

§ 1500. Temporary Absence.

Residence in a State need not be continuous,⁶³ and on the other

Leaving the State, expecting to live permanently elsewhere, entails a loss of residence.⁶⁵

going to another State is to obtain a divorce will not prevent a divorce there if it is his purpose to remain there permanently,⁶⁷ and it is not enough to remain in the new domicile a few weeks or months at a time and spend practically the entire time at the old domicile.⁶⁸

§ 1503. Constitutionality of Statute Avoiding Divorce by Citizen in Another State in Fraud of Law of Domicile.

Mere residence in a State as distinguished from domicile is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon a court of such State to dissolve the marriage relation existing between the plaintiff and a non-resident defendant. So a statute is valid which provides that a divorce is void when obtained by a citizen of the State who goes into another State to procure a divorce in fraud of the law of the domicile.⁶⁹

§ 1504. Domicile of Soldier.

The mere fact that a soldier is stationed in a certain place for the required period does not make it his residence to give jurisdiction in divorce.⁷⁰ So where a resident of Louisiana is appointed to West Point and after graduation there serves in the United States army for thirty years, he retains his domicile in Louisiana although he does not actually live there, and he may there bring suit for divorce for desertion, although he was married in another State and had never lived in Louisiana with his wife. § 1505. Acquiring Domicile in Orient.

The English House of Lords has very recently brought its rule into line with American decisions,⁷² holding that an Englishman can establish a domicile in a country granting extraterritorial rights to foreigners.⁷³ The earlier rule was that the laws and customs of Eastern countries were so different that it could not be presumed that an Englishman intended to adopt that domicile by living there. So where a British subject made his permanent home in Egypt, where he enjoyed extraterritorial rights, a petition by his wife in England for a divorce was denied for lack of jurisdiction, as the husband had acquired a legal domicile in Egypt.⁷⁴ § 1506. Wife's Separate Domicile When Wife Is Libellant.

The domicile of the wife for the purposes of divorce is not necessarily that of the husband, but it is sufficient if she is a bona fide resident of the State where suit is brought,⁷⁵ especially where she remains in the place where they last had their domicile,⁷⁶ but only when she separates from her husband for justifiable cause does she acquire a separate domicile.⁷⁷

Thus a deserted wife may leave the State of her husband and acquire a new domicile in the State where she settled with the intention of making a permanent abode.⁷⁸ Where a wife separates from her husband and goes to live with a relative with the intention of making it her home, she may in that county apply for a divorce, and this is her domicile for the purposes of jurisdiction. The act and intention of making this her home decide the matter.⁷⁹ Where parties were married in the State and move into another State, where the husband deserts the wife and the wife then returns to the State which is the original State of her domicile, she can here obtain a divorce for desertion. The wife having become a citizen of the State in good faith, she is entitled to the protection of its laws. The fact that the desertion takes place in another State is immaterial where the divorce statutes make no difference as to the place of the arising of the ground for which a divorce may be granted, but jurisdiction depends on the domicile of the parties.⁸⁰

The deserted wife may, however, bring suit in the State of the matrimonial domicile where she remains,⁸¹ as her domicile does not follow his in this case.⁸² So where the statute requires a year's residence in the State by the libellant before divorce proceedings can be brought, this is satisfied where the libellant leaves the State on account of her husband's ill treatment and goes to another State with the intention of remaining there until her husband sends for her, and where, after some years, she returns and files a libel for divorce in the State of his domicile. She did not, by living in the other State, lose her domicile in the State she left, as she did not go to the other State with the intention of remaining there and making it her permanent abode. Having in mind the evil the statute was intended to guard against, the court does not think the word "reside" should be construed to mean that the libellant must actually live in the State during the year preceding the libel, but it is sufficient if her legal domicile is here.⁸³

§ 1507. Wife's Separate Domicile Where Wife Is Libellee.

It is difficult to see, however, how the husband can bring suit at the separate residence of his wife, as she can acquire such separate residence only in case he is at fault and she leaves him for good cause, and such suit has been recently dismissed for lack of jurisdiction.⁸⁴

§ 1508. Effect on Husband of Divorce at Wife's Separate Domicile.

One result of the rule requiring personal service to validate a foreign divorce is that where a deserted wife goes to another State, where she establishes a separate domicile under the law of that State, and there obtains a divorce without personal service on the husband, and later marries again and returns to the State where she formerly lives, the second husband may be sued for criminal conversion by the first husband.⁸⁵

§ 1509. Estoppel to Deny Domicile.

A defendant in a proceeding for alimony who has not resided in the State for over ten years may nevertheless be estopped to deny that he is a resident there by recitals in his libel for divorce against the present libellant, as it is a suit between the same parties involving the same subject-matter.⁸⁶

CHAPTER VI.

PARTIES.

- SECTION 1511. Spouse Must Be Libellant.
 1512. Parties Defendant.
 1513. Aliens.
 1514. Infants or Spendthrifts.
 1515. Insane Persons.
 1516. Married Women.
 1517. Disqualification of Judge as Related to Party.
 1518. Rights of Co-respondent.
 1519. Intervention of Public Attorney.

§ 1511. Spouse Must Be Libellant.

Public policy insists so strenuously upon upholding the marriage relation against all outside of it who may seek to intermeddle, that the only proper libellant is that aggrieved spouse who deliberately chooses to take the responsibility of a matrimonial issue. The libellant ought therefore to sign his libel, as evidence that the momentous responsibility is thus assumed; and in some States such personal signature is expressly required by statute.⁸⁸ Even in case of absence or nonage, rendering, perhaps, the intervention of some third person in the pleadings desirable, courts act with the closest scrutiny into the wishes of the real libellant, and do not permit that of any third person to be substituted.⁸⁹

On the other hand, ecclesiastical practice has been, where sentence of nullity was sought, to allow any person plainly interested, especially the father of either of the parties, to attack the supposed marriage, and establish its invalidity.

be empowered by letters. Gould v. Gould, 1 Met. 382.

⁸⁹. See Morgan v. Morgan, 2 Curt. Ec. 679; Newcomb v. Newcomb, 13 Bush, 544.

§ 1512. Parties Defendant.

Persons conspiring with defendant to do the acts complained of are not necessary or proper parties to a suit for divorce,⁹⁰ but in a petition for divorce and partition of certain property one who holds liens on the property should be made a party,⁹¹ and the mere suggestion that the defendant might dispose of his property is no reason for adding third persons as parties defendant.⁹²

§ 1513. Aliens.

An alien living in a State the required period may sue for divorce as being a resident and a citizen.⁹³

§ 1514. Infants or Spendthrifts.

It is the theory of all civil actions that one who, like an infant, cannot enter into a contract will not be permitted to sue upon it. But as infants can enter into a marriage contract it seems settled that they can sue for their dissolution in divorce, and also that they can defend an action for divorce against them. So where one infant brings a libel for divorce against another the libellant should not sue by prochein ami, and the libellee need not defend by guardian ad litem;⁹⁴ so the right to petition is held personal also as to an infant spouse,⁹⁵ or to one under guardianship as a spendthrift.⁹⁶

§ 1515. Insane Persons.⁹⁷

An insane spouse may, by guardian or committee, bring a divorce suit for cause against the guilty partner, with the same rights as though such complainant were in his or her right mind.⁹⁸

Where the defendant has been adjudged insane and a guardian appointed for him, action for divorce should be brought against him and his guardian, although he was of sound mind when the action was brought.⁹⁹ So where a divorce is granted without service on an insane libellee the decree is void, and the court should entertain a petition by the next of kin of the insane person for the appointment of a guardian ad litem with authority to maintain action to set aside the decree.¹

§ 1516. Married Women.

The ancient incapacity of married women being after all a legal fiction, local practice generally permits or requires a wife to sign her own libel. A married woman should be impleaded by her own baptismal or Christian name, and not by the initial letters of her husband's name.²

§ 1517. Disqualification of Judge as Related to Party.

Under a statute disqualifying a judge from sitting in a case if related to one of the "parties," a judge is disqualified who is the father of one of the attorneys who is asking for counsel fees in a divorce suit. The weight of authority favors the adoption of a broad and liberal interpretation of the term "parties."³

§ 1518. Rights of Co-respondent.

Statutes often provide that a co-respondent named has a right to intervene and have the issues tried as to him,⁴ but the co-respondent has no such right in the absence of statute.⁵

At common law, in an action of divorce for adultery, only the spouse need be made a party defendant, but by statute in some jurisdictions the co-respondent should be made a party where known. Under such a statute the fact that the paramour of the wife registered under a fictitious name does not require him to be made a party where his identity cannot be established, and he cannot be reached by service or publication, as no purpose would be served by making him a party.⁶

The court should, where necessary, take proper steps to protect the reputation of the co-respondent where it is unjustly assailed, even after the evidence is closed. So where after a hearing the court announces the guilt of the co-respondent on conflicting evidence, and the libellee then moves before decree to reopen the case on the ground that the co-respondent has been examined by reputable physicians and found to be a virgin, the case should be reopened and the evidence heard. The court remarks that her reputation and whole future life is at stake, and that the stigma placed § 1519. Intervention of Public Attorney.

In a few of our States the public prosecuting officer is required to oppose suits for divorce; and in Scotland it was long the practice for government counsel to guard the public as against the private parties.⁸

The statutes sometimes provide for the intervention of the public attorney to defend divorce cases,⁹ whose duty it is to state any defence which can be properly made,¹⁰ but the failure of the prosecuting officer to appear is a mere irregularity which does not affect the jurisdiction.¹¹

§ 1520. Service.

Divorce suits are commonly governed by special statutes as to service rather than by statutes covering civil suits,¹² but in the absence of special statute divorce suits will be governed by laws as to civil actions.¹³

Summons may issue to any county in the State,¹⁴ and may require special inquiry as to identification.¹⁵

Where the petition does not show jurisdiction, and no appearance is entered, if the petition is amended new process must be taken out.¹⁶

Service of summons is jurisdictional and cannot be waived by appearance,¹⁷ and acceptance of service is bad practice.¹⁸

The defendant may be entitled to a divorce on a cross-bill without personal service on the plaintiff.¹⁹

The co-respondent need be served only where he is identified and can be located.²⁰ Service should appear by a return of the sheriff,²¹ or by affidavit,²² and it is enough to show that the notice is mailed without showing its receipt.²³ Service of the notice after the return day is insufficient.²⁴ § 1521. Service Outside Jurisdiction.

Personal service on the defendant outside the State on a writ brought properly within the State is sufficient,²⁵ but where the statute calls for a notice, the service of a writ outside the State is insufficient.²⁶

A statute giving the plaintiff a right to bring suit in a county other than that of the defendant's residence necessarily gives a right to direct process to the sheriff of another county.²⁷

§ 1525. Libel.

Divorce proceedings are begun by the plaintiff in the proper court and under the proper statute, by means of what is usually called a libel or petition; that is to say, in the form of a written statement, by the complainant or libellee, of his or her cause of action, and of the relief sought. This libel, which has been of essentially the same character from the earliest times, in English ecclesiastical and admiralty courts, and resembles the bill in chancery, is derived from the Roman civil law, and originates still earlier, probably, in that petition to sovereign authority which has been characteristic of governments pursuing written formulas in all ages. The libel states by way of narrative all points essential to a right comprehension of the case. This narrative should be specific, clear, and full. The plaintiff's name and description should be given, also the defendant's name and description; the court should be designated and respectfully addressed; the relief desired should be stated, and the grounds upon which that relief is sought; the material facts should be stated with reasonable exactness as to time and circumstances. In every libel for divorce, marriage with the defendant should be alleged; likewise faithfulness on the plaintiff's part, and a sufficient breach of matrimonial duty by the defendant, such breach being set forth; and, in short, every fact which the statute imports as a prerequisite to granting the relief prayed for.⁴¹

Local practice must determine the precise form of the libel, just as local statute defines the substance of divorce remedies. It is the safer course to adhere in the main to statute expression with reference to the matrimonial breach justifying a divorce, and to make all allegations which the statute seems to require. A petition for divorce ought to set forth the causes of the complaint in the words of the statute or their equivalent, and circumstances of time and place with reasonable certainty; in order that the defendant may be apprised of the matrimonial breach complained of and prepare his defence understandingly, and so, too, that the court may judge whether, the allegations being proved, the general charge is supported.⁴² But a libellant is not confined to a single ground; for, according to the universal practice in England and the United States, various and distinct wrongs, entitling the aggrieved party to the same sort of relief, whether this be a total or partial divorce, may be united in one libel, each wrong being distinctly stated, and the court granting relief upon one or more grounds, according to the testimony produced. But where the statute relief afforded for one wrong is a divorce from bed and board, and for another a divorce from bond of matrimony, the two cannot be united under one and the same petition, in strict matrimonial practice, though there are States which favor such a procedure, and permit, as in common-law actions, that allegations or counts be united, leaving the court to decide as between them.⁴³

The libel for divorce should set forth clearly the requisites for

E. 97 (plaintiff's knowledge of adultery).

"Adulterous life" is insufficient. A bill of divorce which alleges that "the defendant has for a considerable time past given himself over to adulterous practices and is now living an adulterous life" does not show ground for relief. Hahn v. Hahn, 136 Ill. App. 301.

54. Drunkenness. A bill which alleges that the respondent has become addicted to habitual drunkenness contains a sufficient allegation that he is addicted to the habit when bill is filed, and the particular acts need not be set forth. MacMahon v. MacMahon, 170 Ala. 338, 54 So. 185; Hubbell v. Hubbell, 7 Cal. App. 661, 95 P. 664 (facts and not evidence).

Tautology is not a ground for demurrer although the statute states that the facts shall be set forth without repetition. Blanton v. Blanton (Ala.), 67 So. 1000.

An insufficient complaint cannot be cured by verdict. Martin v. Martin, 130 N. C. 27, 40 S. E. 822.

The allegations were held insufficient in the following cases: Smith v. Smith, 124 Cal. 651, 57 P. 573; Geisseman v. Geisseman, 34 Colo. 431, 83 P. 635; Hickson v. Language of statute sufficient. A bill for divorce a mensa et thoro is sufficient if it charges the grounds, abandonment and desertion, cruelty, and vicious conduct, in the language of the statute, without setting out the facts evidencing them. Etheridge v. Etheridge, 120 Md. 11, 87 A. 497.

A petition for divorce for desertion must contain all the elements required by the statute,⁶³ and may also properly aver an abandonment as giving weight to cruelty alleged.⁶⁴ § 1531. Nothing May Be Waived by Pleadings.

The peculiarity of the divorce suit is, as already stated, that the public is a silent party interested in it, and this fact results in the general principle that nothing can be waived or taken as true on agreement of parties.⁷⁰ Hence admissions in the pleadings will not waive proof of jurisdictional facts,⁷¹ and necessary facts must be proved although not denied,⁷² and the presiding judge, as the representative of the people, may make material inquiries even as to matters not covered by the pleadings.⁷³ § 1532. Answer.

The procedure in divorce causes, while requiring constant reference to local codes, will be found flexible and well adapted to securing substantial justice throughout. A striking instance of this is found in the facilities afforded the spouse against whom the libel is brought for making a defence. As for the response, a written answer of some kind, whether by way of general denial or so as to allege special matter in defence, should be filed by a defendant who means to contest the libel.

The answer to the libel must be specific and admit of only one interpretation.⁷⁴ The defendant is bound by an admission contained in his answer,⁷⁵ but an admission in the answer is not enough without proof either of a cause for divorce⁷⁶ or of a jurisdictional fact,⁷⁷ but where the fact of marriage is set up both in the bill and the answer the court may, without other evidence, properly find that a marriage existed.⁷⁸ The answer should set up any affirmative defence⁷⁹ with the same particularity as if alleged in the libel.⁸⁰ § 1537. Cross-Bills.

In many States the defendant may now allege, either by way of recrimination or cross-petition, the commission of some offence by the plaintiff, which is equally reprehensible as a cause for divorce. By means of a cross-bill, in fact, either the defence may be aided or affirmative relief sought, so that the right to divorce becomes viewed with reference to both parties alike,⁸⁷ but a statute authorizing such a counterclaim does not permit such a counterclaim to annul the marriage or when based on facts which would annul it.⁸⁸ And if both parties have equal right to divorce, neither party has, because neither is innocent.

Where the husband files a bill in equity alleging that he is entitled to the society and services of his wife, and that she is engaging in a business in competition with his and seeks to enjoin her from doing so, it is proper for her to file a cross-bill for divorce. If she can by the cross-bill secure a divorce, she deprives him of the only ground on which the husband can maintain his bill and the cross-bill is therefore germane.⁸⁹

§ 1538. What Law Governs Rights in General.⁹⁰

The right to divorce depends on the law in force at the domicile of the parties is the general rule commonly stated,⁹¹ but it is also held that an act to be a good cause for divorce must be such in the place where the act was committed.⁹²

Although the rights of the parties are governed by the law in force at the domicile of the parties, still, where the husband deserts the wife in a State where desertion is not a ground for divorce, she may move to another State where desertion is a ground for divorce and there obtain a divorce on the ground of desertion, desertion not being a specific act but a continued course of conduct.⁹³

§ 1539. Whether Statutes Retroactive.

In the construction of divorce statutes the opinion is a reasonable one, that a new act shall not be presumed to include previous offences of the kind, so as to justify divorce in consequence of that ⁹⁰. The many questions relating to conflict of laws in divorce will be found more fully treated post, § 1953 et seq.

which did not justify at the time of its commission,⁹⁴ and hence it must be shown that the ground existed after the statute went into effect.⁹⁵ Thus, if desertion for a certain continuous period, or imprisonment in the State prison for felony, be made a new cause, the legislative intendment will be that a previous period of desertion shall not be computed, nor a previous imprisonment.⁹⁶ Such, however, is not necessarily or absolutely the case; for statutes may and do refer to pre-existing causes of divorce, to offences present as well as future; and where a statute is plainly worded to that effect, it must be so upheld,⁹⁷ and a law relating to desertion may apply although part of the time of desertion relied on took place before the passage of the statute.⁹⁸

Mr. Bishop inclines, in all cases of doubtful language, to presume that past as well as future offences were to be included; but where the act in question establishes an entirely new ground of divorce, it does not seem to us fair to give the presumption any such latitude.

But in the United States this inquiry leads further to the consideration of objections grounded in the several State constitutions, where may be found clauses forbidding retrospective laws, or laws which impair the obligations of contracts. A retrospective law, says Story, is one which "takes away or impairs vested rights, acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability, in respect to transactions or considerations already past."⁹⁹ But the terms "vested rights" and "transactions" seem hardly appropriate to the status or relation of marriage where dissolution is sought; while that of "contract" is decidedly inappropriate. This point is not, however, very clearly adjudicated as yet. Some States maintain quite strenuously that the legislature cannot dissolve, or authorize the courts to dissolve, a marriage for a pre-existing cause of offence.¹ Other States, on the contrary, sustain all such enactments, asserting that "retrospective" acts, and acts "impairing the obligation of contracts," have no application whatever to the marriage institution and the reasons for dissolving it.² To this latter view Mr. Bishop inclines, at the same time suggesting that upon the property rights of parties to a dissolved marriage there is room for a constitutional distinction as against retroactive legislation.

Divorce legislation will usually be construed to apply only to actions instituted after its enactment,³ although a statute relating to procedure may have a retroactive effect.⁴

CAUSES EXISTING AT TIME OF MARRIAGE.

- 1550. Venereal Disease at Time of Marriage.
- 1551. Existence of Prior Marriage.
- 1552. Fraud.
- 1553. Duress.

§ 1547. In General.

While an annulment proceeding is for some cause existing at the time of marriage, divorce is usually granted only for some cause arising after marriage,¹⁷ and the fact that the marriage should never have been made on account of the diversity of age of the parties is no ground for divorce.¹⁸ § 1548. Prior Unchastity or Pregnancy.

A divorce will not ordinarily be granted for antenuptial incontinence,¹⁹ and even concealment by a woman of her prior unchastity is not a ground for divorce in Kentucky,²⁰ but concealment of the fact that one has been divorced for adultery may be such fraud as to entitle to divorce.²¹

That a woman induces a man to marry her by falsely stating that

That a wife, before marriage, was the kept woman of a married man was not a ground for divorce, where, after marrying, she endeavored to lead a decent, cleanly life. Rosenberger v. Rosenberger, 150 Ky. 803, 150 S. W. 1923.

she is pregnant is not ground for divorce,²² but may be where she is really pregnant by another man,²³ and proof of the pregnancy of the wife by another man before the marriage will entitle to a divorce.²⁴

Doubtless, the offended husband, in order to procure a divorce where his wife proves to have been pregnant when he married her, ought to be able to show that the child was not his; and simply on the ground of her fraud, as we have seen, and apart from scandalizing him before the world, proceedings for divorce or nullity are held not maintainable, even though the wife bore a bad character before marriage, or was in fact pregnant by another man, since marriage is permitted to be the gateway to repentance and virtue.²⁵

§ 1549. Impotency.

Impotence as a cause of divorce means incapacity for sexual intercourse, and does not also imply incapacity to beget or bear children,²⁶ and incapacity for sexual intercourse is commonly a cause for divorce,²⁷ unless known to the other party before marriage²⁸ or cured before the hearing.²⁹

Concealment of the fact that one of the parties had a venereal disease on marriage is not a cause for divorce.³²

§ 1551. Existence of Prior Marriage.

A previous existing marriage of one of the parties may by statute be made a ground of divorce,³³ but one cannot be granted a divorce who marries a woman whom he knows to be the wife of another.³⁴

A divorce may be granted on the ground of fraud in procuring the marriage, as where one conceals that he is an epileptic, forbidden to marry,³⁵ but mere misstatement of ownership of property is not enough.³⁶

§ 1553. Duress.

Where one is forced into marriage by threats or other influences overpowering the free exercise of volition the usual remedy is by proceedings for annulment, but in many States action for divorce will lie.³⁸ Threats made to induce a man to marry a woman do not constitute duress where other motives induced him to marry,³⁹ and the mere fact that one is arrested for seduction does not show duress.⁴⁰

§ 1554. Loathsome Disease.

Statutes sometimes render the mere contracting of a loathsome disease a cause for divorce, and such a cause includes gonorrhea. It may be argued that such diseases may be sometimes innocently contracted, but the legislatures in these States seem to have taken the attitude that even though the disease was brought on without guilt, still it so alters the nature of the marriage condition that release should be granted.⁴¹

§ 1555. Habitual Intemperance.

In the absence of statute mere drunkenness is not a ground for divorce,⁴² although it causes the husband to fail to support the wife and to justify her in leaving him,⁴³ but it has been the tendency of our lawmakers in recent years to make aggravated intemperance a cause of divorce. Such statutes commonly require evidence of habitual drunkenness in some form⁴⁴ for a definite period,⁴⁵ and are not satisfied by evidence of occasional⁴⁶ though frequent intoxication, though constant and continuous drunkenness need not be shown if drunkenness is a fixed habit.⁴⁷

To be an habitual drunkard within the meaning of the divorce laws, a person does not have to be constantly drunk, nor necessarily incapacitated from transacting his business. It is sufficient if he has a fixed habit of frequently and repeatedly getting drunk when the opportunity presents itself, or has lost the will power to resist temptation in that respect.⁴⁸

The habitual but moderate use of intoxicating liquors is not a cause for divorce.⁴⁹ As to habitual intemperance, however, in that sense, facts and circumstances are duly considered by the court, and frequent and regular recurrence of excessive indulgence, though not slight indiscretions, may suffice to establish the habit, without the need of expert testimony or of fine distinctions as to the inebriate's business capacity.⁵⁰

§ 1556. When Habit Formed.

The contraction of the intemperate habit after matrimony is sometimes made a prerequisite.⁵¹

A divorce cannot be granted for gross and confirmed habits of intoxication under a statute which requires that the habits must be acquired prior to the marriage where the husband had been a drunkard before marriage, but promised to reform, but was not cured and began his habits again a few days after marriage.⁵² § 1557. Habit Must Exist When Libel Brought.

Where the divorce is sought on account of the habits of the libellee as of intoxication or of using drugs, the condition must exist at the time the divorce proceedings are begun,⁵³ and probably also at the time the divorce is actually granted.⁵⁴ So if a drug user has reformed at the time of the filing of the libel, the divorce should be refused, although the parties have separated and the libel is brought within a reasonable time after separation.⁵⁵ The divorce in such cases is not granted as a punishment, as in case of adultery, but to remedy a condition, and the State has an interest that the marriage relation shall be preserved unless the condition exists at the time the divorce is granted.

§ 1558. Use of Drugs.

The use of drugs habitually is in some States made a cause for divorce, but the habit must be shown at the time of the filing of the libel, and where there was a reformation before that time this is not a cause for divorce.⁵⁶ The immoderate use of opium or chloroform, intemperance by eating or inhalation, is not generally imported by legislation authorizing divorce for intemperance, but only drinking in excess, or the immoderate use of alcoholic liquors.⁵⁷

§ 1559. Insanity.

Insanity occurring after marriage, with or without some predisposition insufficient, of course, to invalidate the ceremony, though a misfortune which beclouds many a long conjugal union, is rarely permitted to become legal ground of divorce, notwithstanding the strong social pressure sometimes exerted to have it added to the list.⁵⁸ If the insanity was superinduced by drunkenness, or other cause of itself justifying divorce, such cause might perhaps be alleged. And facts showing great depravity of moral character in the libellee, and abandoned habits, ought not readily to be misconstrued into proof of mere insanity.⁵⁹

A concealed hereditary taint, which breaks out after marriage, is sometimes made cause of divorce by our legislatures. Otherwise, as in the case of some physical infirmity visited upon a husband or wife, the burden of the other partner becomes often a hard one; and yet devoted kindness and forbearance not only afford the surest hope of restoring the sufferer, diseased in mind or body, to health once more, but may bring the highest blessings to the patient spouse. The constancy of husband and wife to one another in sickness or health, in accordance with the marriage vow, is the crown of matrimony, and rebellious passion is too mean a flame to burn by its side.

Insanity is not a ground for divorce unless made so by statute,⁶⁰ and divorce may be prohibited where either party is insane.⁶¹

§ 1560. Conviction of Crime.

Conviction of felonious crime, with perhaps actual sentence besides to prison for a considerable length of time, becomes a cause of divorce; partly from the consideration that something like desertion ensues, but more, we think, because of the public indignity sustained by the innocent spouse in consequence, who is forced to endure the ignominy of partner to a convicted felon. Were separation the only ground to allege, it might be argued that if a prisoner were pardoned out before the expiration of his sentence, he might properly resist a divorce, but as the law stands he cannot; for the right of divorce becomes complete upon the conviction and sentence.⁶² Divorce acts vary in language as to this provision; and we need hardly add that if imprisonment "in the State's prison" be the offence named, a conviction and punishment by sentence elsewhere cannot be relied upon.⁶³

Statutes often make conviction after marriage of an infamous crime⁶⁴ or felony a cause for divorce.⁶⁵

Where the statute prescribes the length of time of the sentence, this is reckoned as the maximum without regard for what may be taken off for good conduct,⁶⁶ and where one is sentenced for different crimes each stands by itself and the sum of the sentences cannot be added together to make up the statutory period.⁶⁷

A pardon does not affect the conviction as a cause for divorce,⁶⁸ and one is "imprisoned" under the statutes where convicted and sentenced and entered and numbered in the penitentiary and then pardoned.⁶⁹

A statute making sentence to imprisonment a cause for divorce is not limited to sentences imposed after the passage of the statute, but it is enough that the sentence was imposed after the marriage. The court takes the view that as divorce statutes concern the good order of society there is no reason why statutes creating causes for divorce should not have a retroactive effect unless the statute expressly indicates that it is to act prospectively only.⁷⁰

§ 1561. History.

The Christian rule permitted the Jewish husband to put away his wife for adultery in preference to all others, if not to the exclusion of all others. And, adopting that principle, most English and American statutes now in force pronounce adultery cause for the fullest possible divorce, on an injured husband's behalf, which the law recognizes, namely, from bond of matrimony. Prior, however, in England, to 1858, when the Divorce Act took effect, the ecclesiastical courts took jurisdiction of such cases; and their practice, as already seen,⁷¹ was for centuries, where the decree sought was not nullity, as for cause anterior to marriage, but divorce on cause arising subsequent, to pronounce nothing more than a sentence of separation from bed and board. These courts were influenced, doubtless, by the ancient Church dogma that marriage is a sacrament; and hence Protestants rich and powerful had recourse to Parliament for a full bill of divorce, just as Catholic sovereigns had sought dispensations from the Pope.

§ 1562. What Constitutes.

Adultery is a plain offence, and quite universally admitted by legislation to justify the dissolution of a marriage, since the crime

71. Supra, § 1470.

itself involves conjugal unfaithfulness at the most vital part of the marital relation. By adultery, in the present connection, we mean, of course, the voluntary sexual intercourse of either married party with someone, married or single, of the opposite sex, other than the offender's own spouse.⁷²

That adultery which justifies divorce must have been voluntary, involving the criminal intent. Where the spouse was ravished, on the one hand, or, on the other, held voluntary intercourse with one erroneously believed to be the conjugal partner, there is constituted no cause for a divorce; nor is one's wife to be set aside as an adulteress who married again, reasonably, but mistakenly, supposing her first husband dead, or herself divorced from him, and whose intercourse continued with the second husband until the bigamous marriage was annulled, and no longer.⁷³ Carnal intercourse held with a third person while insane cannot afford ground of divorce against a spouse for adultery, according to the weightier authorities.⁷⁴ But one's re-marriage under pretences known to be false cannot shield the guilty offender; nor is religious belief in the moral right of polygamy or concubinage to be alleged in defence of a libel for the cause of adultery.⁷⁵

So one may obtain a divorce on the ground of adultery where the spouse obtains a void decree of divorce and thereafter marries and lives with another.⁷⁶

Where a husband commits rape on another woman this constitutes adultery on his part, as his act was voluntary.⁷⁷ § 1563. Adultery as Habitual Illicit Cohabitation.

In some States adultery implies habitual living in illicit relationship, and a single act is not enough to entitle to a divorce.⁷⁸ But the crime of living together in "open and notorious adultery" may be committed if the parties so lived together for a single day, and in a criminal prosecution it is enough to allege the commission of the crime on a certain day without a continuendo.⁷⁹ The crime is committed by the cohabitation openly of a man and woman who are not married, although they claimed to be married and kept secret the fact that they were not married.⁸⁰ § 1564. Adultery a Ground for Divorce Only When so Provided by Statute.

Adultery is not a ground for divorce unless made so by statute.⁸¹

§ 1565. Whether Equally a Cause of Divorce to Either Spouse.

A woman's chastity is of more concern to one's self, to society, and to a sound posterity, than a man's; her carnal appetite is less violent; nature sets a stronger seal upon her loose indulgence of passion; and when she yields guiltily to man's solicitation, so delicate is her organization, that the stain left upon her moral nature is deeper. Her body is the temple of posterity, and an illegitimate conception her lasting pollution. If a wife be child-bearing, she is disabled for long intervals from gratifying her husband's appetite, though that appetite should recur in regular course. All this might indicate that nature enjoins continence more rigidly upon the one conjugal partner than the other, instead of binding them alike to vigilant regulation of their passions. And hence the ruder codes punished the adultery of the wife, but not that of the husband.⁸² So far as relates to a wife living in the usual domestic seclusion, guilty love must generally precede her adultery, her mind and heart becoming depraved before she yields a sinful assent; but with a husband this does not necessarily follow, since opportunity and the sexual desire operate ardently, quickly, and recklessly to some present sensual gratification.

In our enlightened community, however, husband and wife may be treated as on an equal plane in this respect, woman herself being strenuously desirous to have it so; hence American divorce statutes do not, for the most part, accord to the innocent spouse of one sex relief for conjugal unfaithfulness which they would deny reciprocally to the other.⁸³ British inclination is different; for the usual parliamentary practice was to withhold the special act of divorce where the wife petitioned against her adulterous husband, but to grant it where the guilt was reversed;⁸⁴ and in England to-day adultery by the husband is not a cause for divorce, but only for judicial separation, and to obtain a divorce the wife must also prove either cruelty or desertion.⁸⁵

Under the common-law idea of adultery an unmarried man who has intercourse with a married woman is guilty of adultery, as it was based on the possibility of introducing spurious issue and to adulterate the issue of an innocent husband and turn the inheritance away from his own blood to that of a stranger.⁸⁶ There is 82. See ante, § 1470.

83. The language of the statute must serve for the criterion in each State. Living separately in adultery is, or was, the offence, as defined in North Carolina and Louisiana, for which divorce could be granted. Long v. Long, 2 Hawks. 189; Adams v. Hurst, 9 La. 243. This contemplates a separation without the fault of the libellant; thus, the adultery of a wife, committed by her after a separation caused by the husband's wrong, will not avail him to dissolve the bonds of matrimony. Tew v. Tew, 86 N. C. 316.

some authority, however, for the view that an unmarried man having intercourse with a married woman is not guilty of the crime of adultery. These courts have most of them adopted the ecclesiastical view of adultery as being a breach of the marriage vows of the defendant, or the decision is based on the wording of the statute.⁸⁷

§ 1566. As Crime.

This is an offence not by itself indictable at common law, but left rather to the ecclesiastical or matrimonial courts for cognizance and discipline.⁸⁸ In the United States, however, it is punishable by fine and imprisonment under local statutes, which usually define the offence in addition. Some of these local codes incline to treating criminal proceedings for adultery, like those generally in the divorce courts, as matter for discipline at conjugal discretion, so that prosecution for adultery is forbidden except upon the complaint of the injured spouse.⁸⁹

§ 1567. Evidence.

Two elements are necessary to prove adultery, opportunity to commit the crime and an adulterous disposition. It is not necessary from the nature of things to prove the actual coition or even that the parties were seen in bed together, as the law presumes, human nature being what it is, when opportunity is coupled with a lascivious disposition, that the natural human passions are gratified.

But the adulterous disposition is an important element which must always be shown, either by acts of improper familiarity, by language or any acts indicating the nature of the relationship. "The mere association of a man and woman, however frequent and extended, is not of itself . . . sufficient to prove the crime of adultery. A man and woman may be brought daily together for the transaction of business, they may live in the same house and be frequently seen in each other's company, but these facts are not enough to show adultery, even where it may be conceded opportunity exists to commit the offence. The offence is not established under these conditions unless there is some evidence of speech or conduct indicating an adulterous disposition." So where a physician separated from his wife and gave up his practice, and bought a farm, where he lived with his minor son and a woman and her son, and they managed the farm together, there is no evidence of adultery where no evidence appears of improper familiarity or other suspicious circumstances.⁹⁰

Adultery of the wife should be proved by some clear, direct evidence, and it is insufficient to show that she went to walk alone with a man on one occasion or that she kept company with lewd women. Direct and positive evidence of the criminal act is not required, but the circumstantial evidence must establish it clearly.⁹¹

The libellant in a divorce case need not prove adultery by evidence "which is clear, cogent and convincing," but it is sufficient if it is shown by the preponderance of the evidence, as in the case of facts in other civil cases.⁹²

Reputation.—To prove a cause for divorce it is not permissible to put in evidence for the plaintiff the general reputation of the defendant for chastity.⁹³ Some courts hold that one charged with adultery may put her reputation for chastity in evidence just as in criminal cases the defendant may put in character evidence, but it is in perfect accord with this doctrine to deny the complainant the right to attack the defendant's character through general reputation for lewdness and unchastity. There are a number of cases deciding that it is permissible to prove the character of a woman with whom a husband charged with adultery associates or visits, or the reputation of a house visited by the wife charged with this ground for divorce, but in this class of cases the character offered is that of a third person, not a party to the cause, and it may be material as bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the party charged as showing the probable purpose of the association or visit.⁹⁴

§ 1568. Corroboration Required.

It is settled in many States that a divorce cannot be granted on the uncorroborated evidence of the petitioner,⁹⁵ and it is also settled in many States that the uncorroborated confession of the respondent is insufficient foundation for divorce;⁹⁶ and it is held in a recent case that the confession and the petitioner's testimony together are insufficient, on the theory that the parties ought not to be allowed together to present a case for divorce on account of the danger of collusion,⁹⁷ but it has been held that if the confession is made in open court there is not so much danger of collusion, and then the petitioner's testimony is sufficient corroboration.⁹⁸

A confession of a wife of unchastity as a basis of an action for annulment should be corroborated by independent facts and circumstances, and this does not appear in the case of a written confession given by the wife in a moment of anger when only the husband was present that her child is not his, where she afterwards makes repeated efforts to have him support it, claiming it is his. This confession amounts to nothing more than the testimony of the wife, had she taken the stand, which is insufficient.⁹⁹

CRUELTY: WHAT CONSTITUTES: PHYSICAL AND MENTAL.

SECTION 1569. Cruelty; What Sort Justifies Divorce.

1577. Necessity of Physical Injury. Mental Distress; American Views.

§ 1569. Cruelty; What Sort Justifies Divorce.

Legal cruelty is more readily expounded by negative than affirmative language. Legislative enactments, which in practice should always be resorted to according to the jurisdiction, employ various phrases not always equivalent, such as the following: "cruel, inhuman, and barbarous treatment;" "extreme cruelty;" "cruel and inhuman treatment;" such conduct on the husband's part towards his wife as renders it "unsafe and improper for her to cohabit with him;" "intolerable cruelty;" "extreme and repeated cruelty;" "cruelty of treatment."

There are statutes in certain of the United States which come short of the extremity of cruelty altogether,¹ by justifying divorce for "excesses," "outrages," "indignities to the wife's person," "intolerable indignities," etc., such as to render living together insupportable and life burdensome. But it is perceived that this cause of divorce is designed regularly for the vindication of the weaker party, usually a wife, whose wrong from her husband's

1. See also the North Carolina expression in Miller v. Miller, 78 N. C. 102; Miles v. Miles, 76 Pa. St. 357;

cruelty may be found greater, in the average of cases, than from his silent infidelities.

The English ecclesiastical courts long recognized cruelty, or scævitia, the offence our modern divorce acts so amplify and vary in phrase, as ground for pronouncing a sentence of divorce from bed and board. In general, this is the statute offence, whatever the difference of phrase, and whether the divorce be partial or complete. "The complaint," says Lord Stowell, "generally proceeds from the wife, as the weaker person; but it may come from the man, and has so done in several cases."²

What, then, is legal cruelty? Lord Stowell, in the leading case of Evans v. Evans, while declining to assert a positive definition, laid down the limitations of the rule with great strictness, and, at the same time, very justly. "The causes," he observed, "must be great and weighty, and such as show an absolute impossibility that the duties of the married life can be discharged. In a state of personal danger no duties can be discharged; for the duty of self-preservation must take place before the duties of marriage, which are secondary both in commencement and in obligation; but what falls short of this is with great caution to be admitted." And, as he further stated, the danger of life, limb, or health to the petitioner was usually alleged as the ground for judicial interference; a reasonable apprehension of bodily hurt being the indispensable condition.³

We may consider, then, that to entitle the wife to a divorce from her husband, on the ground of cruelty, there must appear by the proof either actual violence on his part, or such other misbehavior as to fill her with reasonable apprehension of bodily injury. And, in general, it should be stated that wherever the conduct of one spouse to the other is such that the latter cannot continue cohabitation without reasonable ground for fearing such bodily harm from the former as seriously to obstruct the exercise of marital duties.

² Waring v. Waring, 2 Phillim. ³ Evans v. Evans, 1 Hag. Con. 35. 132.

or render the conjugal state unendurable, there legal cruelty exists, and cause for divorce. From this point of view, violence actually committed, or violence threatened, are treated as alike reprehensible.⁴ Many of the latest cases rest upon the simple requirement that there be reasonable ground, under the circumstances, for the complaining party to believe that the continuance of marital intercourse would be attended with danger to life or health.⁵

"Cruel and abusive treatment" is a legislative expression which is found superadded to "extreme cruelty," but with what peculiar significance, beyond the sevitia we have discussed, it would be difficult to say.⁶

Extreme cruelty is "personal violence intentionally and wantonly inflicted so serious as to endanger life, limb or health, or create reasonable apprehension of such danger."⁷ § 1570. Character of Parties Considered in Determining What Constitutes Cruelty.

In determining what constitutes cruelty regard must be paid to the physical and mental condition of the parties and their character and social station.⁸

The age, temperament, and disposition of the two spouses, and to some extent their rank and condition, ought fairly to be esti-

5. The rule is thus stated in New Jersey. Where the husband has been guilty, or there is reasonable ground to apprehend that he will be guilty, of any actual violence which will endanger the safety or health of the wife, or where he has inflicted upon her any physical injury, accompanied by such persistent exhibition of ill-feeling and opprobrious epithets as will endanger her health, or render her life one of such extreme discomfort and wretchedness as to incapacitate her to discharge the duties of a wife, the decree of separation should be pronounced. *Close v. mated, with the view of determining whether the reasonable apprehension of bodily harm was present in the case. Thus, in injuries which accomplish the physical hurt of a wife or husband through the infliction of mental pain and anguish, a spouse who does not appear of such sensitive nature and refined feelings that his or her health would be reasonably endangered by the conjugal misbehavior in question, cannot procure a divorce as for cruelty.⁹

Where the divorce is sought on the ground of the use of rough language much must depend on the character of the parties and their degree of cultivation,¹⁰ and there is some authority that the continual use of vulgar and indecent language to one of refinement and delicacy is ground for divorce.¹¹

§ 1571. Combination of Various Acts.

Cruelty in law being not fixed and definite, but so dependent on all the circumstances of each case, the court must examine all the particulars of each set of matrimonial troubles presented, and a combination of various kinds of cruelty not in themselves a cause for divorce may together be a cause for divorce.¹² § 1572. Necessity of Continuance of Acts.

A single gross instance of cruelty to the person may justify divorce, especially if the circumstances indicate that the victim is in further bodily danger; or if, indeed, that act alone betrayed a cruel disposition in the offending spouse (since this may well excite apprehension), or perhaps if, as some cases are content to assert, the act itself endangers the victim's life or health.¹³ But the provocation as well as the severity of the act should be considered, and cautious courts disincline to punish a single act so summarily where there was exasperation, or where the violence was slight, and when a repetition of the offense is not likely to occur unless unfairly provoked, and hence further cohabitation may not be thought unsafe.¹⁴

Hence it is a general rule that a single act of violence is not cruelty sufficient as a cause for divorce,¹⁵ nor are isolated instances of cruelty repeated at long intervals.¹⁶ That no reasonable apprehension of danger was entertained or existed at all may well be inferred when such single act is set up years after it was performed, or disconnected acts stretching over a long interval of uninterrupted marriage intercourse are made the ground of later proceedings for a divorce by a dissatisfied spouse.¹⁷ As against repeated or habitual acts of personal violence, however, redress sought within a reasonable time will undoubtedly be granted.

It is perceived that personal violence is not regarded as an indispensable element in the latest cases.¹⁸ § 1573. Personal Violence.

Habitual personal violence constitutes legal cruelty;¹⁹ and violence of any kind may be aggravated by being so manifested before others as to degrade and shame the spouse injured.²⁰ Whipping a wife and declaring an intention to persist in it is legal cruelty;²¹ and so would be spitting upon her, pushing and dragging her about the room and slapping her; chastisement altogether unjustifiable, and showing a disposition dangerous to the conjugal continuance.²²

Acts of violence²³ or severe blows will always constitute evidence of cruelty,²⁴ especially when accompanied by threatening conduct self against violence, a divorce for cruelty will not usually be granted.³²

But there are certain kinds of cruelty against which no man, however able-bodied, can properly defend himself,³³ and the physical ability of the male spouse to defend himself ought to furnish no decisive obstruction to his right of relief against woman's cruelty. Many men scruple to lay violent hands on a woman, or to contend in such unseemly quarrels; and they would sooner submit to a blow. A sick or crippled husband, or even an able-bodied husband, may be physically weaker, moreover, than his wife in such instances. And once more, the use of poison, loaded fire-arms, and the like, puts physical advantage aside; so that the reckless wife, strong of nerve, may well overpower the bravest and most vigorous of husbands, when the latter is prudent enough to appreciate the danger.³⁴

The husband's prayer for judicial separation was allowed on account of his wife's cruelty in an English case decided by Lord Penzance in 1864. The wife had habitually shown great and unrestrained violence; irritability on all, even the slightest, occasions; her burst of unprovoked ill temper, and the abuse she heaped constantly upon her husband, were fully proved. But she went further; and "emboldened by a policy of passive resistance which he had adopted from religious motives, she sought to rule his conduct by threats of personal attack; and finally she thrust herself before him on the steps of a public chapel, the service of which he was attending against her will; assailed him with abuse and blows, and, as the sole refuge from an unseemly struggle, drove him with ignominy home."³⁵ The excitement and nervous shock threw the husband into a fit, and caused him great mental and bodily prostration.

Justly, therefore, cruelty is permitted to be a cause of divorce on behalf of either husband or wife, under the law which prevails in England and most parts of the United States. But under some of our local statutes, the wife is specified as the only spouse to whom such complaints of marital misconduct are available for dissolving the union.²⁸ § 1576. Physical Injury and Mental Suffering; English Views.

It may be supposed that with the modern denial of the husband's right of discipline, and the growing refinement of manners and equality of the sexes, not to add the readiness of the courts, so much greater now than formerly, to part unhappy couples, the definition shifts somewhat to accommodate the times. And hence injuries inflicted upon a wife, such as cause mental, more immediately than physical, suffering, are considered cause for divorce. The sensitive organization of a weaker spouse always deserves consideration where the stronger brutally abused his power; yet some courts are found more considerate, or perhaps more compliant, in this respect than others, to compare English and American cases together. The older and more conservative doctrine on this point is clearly announced by Lord Stowell with great beauty of language.

"What merely wounds the mental feelings is in few cases to be admitted, where not accompanied with bodily injury, either actual or menaced. Mere austerity of temper, petulance of manners, rudeness of language, a want of civil attention and accommodation, even occasional sallies of passion, if they do not threaten bodily harm, do not amount to legal cruelty; they are high moral offences in the marriage state, undoubtedly; not innocent surely in any state of life; but still they are not that cruelty against which the law can relieve. Under such misconduct of either of the parties, for it may exist on one side as well as the other, the suffering party must bear in some degree the consequences of an injudicious connection; must subdue by decent resistance or by prudent conciliation; and if this cannot be done, both must suffer in silence."²⁷

This opinion was pronounced in 1790, since which time public views have changed upon the necessity that the aggrieved party should exercise conjugal forbearance when wilfully persecuted. The above quotation may still stand perhaps as sound law; but not so clearly what Lord Stowell further proceeded to state as concerned the infliction of mental suffering. An apprehension of physical danger he insisted upon as still the criterion; an apprehension reasonable of itself and not "an apprehension arising merely from an exquisite and diseased sensibility of the mind." This, perhaps, we may admit, but not readily what follows. "Petty vexations applied to such a constitution of mind," he continued, "may certainly in time wear out the animal machine, but still they are not cases of legal relief; people must relieve themselves as well as they can by prudent resistance, by calling in the succors of religion and the consolation of friends; but the aid of courts is not to be resorted to in such cases with any effect."²⁸

From the bias, more than the language, here employed, American, and probably English, courts of the present day are found to practically dissent. For while that which merely wounds the feelings and produces mental suffering falls short of legal cruelty, wilful vexations, apart from physical menace or injury, which prey upon the health of a delicate spouse, and threaten bodily harm by endangering the bodily health and unfitting for the duties of spouse, are usually treated at this day, especially if repeated and habitual after the harm it does is discovered, as amounting to legal cruelty such as to justify divorce on that ground.²⁹

²⁷ Evans v. Evans, 1 Hag. Con. 35; 4 Eng. Ec. 310, 311.

²⁸ Evans v. Evans, 1 Hag. Con. 35; 4 Eng. Ec. 310, 311.

²⁹ Staples, J., in a Virginia case, lays down the definition of cruelty with becoming caution, yet with such admissions. Austerity, rudeness, petulance, what merely wounds the feelings, without being accompanied by

What must be the extent of the injury, or what particular acts should excite a reasonable apprehension of bodily harm, the circumstances of each case, which vary somewhat with the surroundings of life and the relations of the pair to society, should determine.

§ 1577. Necessity of Physical Injury; Mental Distress; American Views.

Acts causing bodily injury and grievous mental suffering, making cohabitation dangerous, will everywhere be held to constitute cruelty.⁴⁰ On the whole, as to the harm which justifies the present divorce, the most intelligent cases estimate it from the point of physical, not mental, hurt. Hence the mental infliction proves material when resulting in bodily hurt; so that a reasonable apprehension of losing one's bodily health and strength may be said to result from the conjugal misconduct complained of. Threats, malicious and wanton, opprobrious words and epithets falsely and wickedly bestowed, all these may so operate upon the timid and sensitive nature of a wife as to undermine her health and incapacitate her from the discharge of the functions of a marriage companion; and by such means the stronger party may in the particular instance have sought purposely to do her a bodily injury. Now, when the health is thus endangered by wanton brutality of language inducing reasonable apprehension of so sinister a design, we think the condition of legal cruelty is fulfilled. For it is admitted that the physical danger under discussion may be, if only sufficient in degree, danger either to the life or limb, bodily injury or actual menace, does not, he concludes with Lord Stowell, amount to legal cruelty. But he admits that there may be cases in which the husband, without violence, actual or threatened, may make the marriage state impossible to be endured; that there may be angry words, coarse and abusive language, humiliating insults, and annoyances in all the forms that malice can suggest, which may as effectually endanger life or health as personal violence, and which, therefore, would afford grounds of relief by the court. Latham v. Latham, 30 Gratt. 307.

40. Knapp v. Knapp, 23 Cal. App. 10, 136 P. 719.

such as blows and poisoning; or danger merely to the health;⁴¹ it might be deliberate starvation or withholding needful medical assistance.⁴² And after much show of reluctance in our earlier judges to investigating such abuses as produce ill-health by operating upon the mind, the weight of judicial opinion is now preponderating in that direction.⁴³ If it seem a strain of principle to connect such mental inflictions with bodily injuries, we must recur to cruelty per se, apart from definitions of legal cruelty, and assure ourselves that purposely frightening a nervous and timorous spouse, and subduing by fear with the malicious design of producing suffering, and making the victim wretched instead of fostering love, is cruel, because it is inhuman, hard-hearted, and brutal.

There is much difference of opinion as to whether cruelty presupposes physical violence and injury to health, many courts holding that this is essential,⁴⁴ or that reasonable apprehension of it may be,⁴⁵ and even isolated acts of violence not interrupting the § 1578. Incompatibility.

A divorce for cruelty will not be granted to a couple merely because they are unsuited to each other,⁵¹ but conduct destroying the possibility of living together as husband and wife may be a ground for divorce.⁵² § 1579. Rendering Cohabitation Insupportable.

Cruelty or extreme cruelty as a statutory cause of divorce means any such conduct as entirely subverts the family relations by rendering the association intolerable, as persons are bound to submit to the ordinary consequences of human infirmity and unwise selec-

Cruelty after decree. A husband, obtaining a divorce voidable at the election of the wife, may not rely on acts of cruelty committed by the wife during the decree, and before its vacation as a ground for divorce. Andrade v. Andrade, 14 Ariz. 379, 128 P. 813.

a quarrel in which both are at fault, and one spouse suffered about as much as the other.⁵⁷

The fact that the husband refused to allow the wife to participate in the conduct of his business, which resulted in violent quarrels and bickerings between them, is not of itself a cause for divorce for extreme cruelty. Neither incompatibility of temper nor the ordinary misunderstandings and bickerings which are characteristic of the marriage relation in a considerable percentage of cases constitute extreme cruelty.⁵⁸

The fact that husband and wife quarrelled on two occasions does not justify her in leaving him so that she can acquire a separate domicile to give jurisdiction of an action of divorce in another State. Nowhere has an occasional and isolated disturbance of the family relations participated in by both of the spouses been considered sufficient to authorize the dissolution of the marriage relation. Sporadic quarrels or disagreements between the spouses in which both of the parties are equally guilty are not to be treated by the courts as constituting grounds for divorce.⁵⁹ § 1581. Quarrels Over Conveyance of Property.

Cruelty is not shown by the wife refusing to join with the husband in conveying real estate,⁶⁰ nor because he threatens to sell community property when she desires to keep it.⁶¹

§ 1582. Unconcealed Aversion.

Unconcealed aversion⁶² or acts showing settled aversion may be legal cruelty,⁶³ but the manifestation by either of mere heartless disregard of the marriage vow and obligations may not be.⁶⁴

The mere fact that a wife who had borne her husband seven children treats him coldly and denies him sexual intercourse, and refuses to speak to him on the street, although she continues to take care of his house and children, is not a ground of divorce. It is not cruel and inhuman treatment, and as long as the wife stays under her husband's roof it is not desertion.⁶⁵

§ 1583. Discourtesy.

Discourtesy⁶⁶ or mere acts of uncouth rudeness are not cruelty.⁶⁷

§ 1584. Refusal to Entertain Spouse.

That a husband refused to take his wife to places of entertainment and is a poor companion is not cause of divorce.⁶⁸

§ 1585. Acts of Suspicion.

Mere acts of suspicion do not constitute legal cruelty justifying a divorce.⁶⁹

or bad temper,⁷¹ especially when both parties are at fault,⁷² nor an occasional outburst of passion, nor mere abuse, however gross, apart from treatment in the presence of others, are not causes for divorce in themselves.⁷³ But even though abusive language will not be by itself cause sufficient for divorce on the ground of legal cruelty, yet, where blows are proved, abusive language may be taken into view for determining their character as constituting the offence at issue.⁷⁴ The nature and character of the violence and threats being material, this would tend to explain it as justifying the apprehension complained of; upon which suggestion evidence of the spouse's drunkenness at the time has been admitted in the same connection;⁷⁵ and one's habitual abusive misconduct towards his spouse, and his ordinary ill-temper.⁷⁶

Cruelty as a cause of divorce includes any conduct on the part of the husband or wife which is calculated to seriously impair the health or permanently destroy the happiness of the other. The object of the court is not to punish the offender, but to protect the unfortunate; and while a decree of divorce or separation should never be granted upon slight differences, which are likely to arise at times in the best regulated families, it should not be denied when it is made clearly to appear that the conduct of the offending party is such that to continue the marital relation would either permanently destroy the happiness or ruin the health of the other. Where a wife is made ill by the husband's fits of rage and statements that they would have to separate, and by his constant neglect § 1587. Threats; Reasonable Apprehension of Danger.

It seems to be the general rule in this country that mere words will not constitute cruelty, as in case of threats,⁷⁸ nor simply breaking dishes, using grossly improper language, and in a momentary gust threatening to kick the spouse from the house,⁷⁹ but threats of serious personal violence will be cruelty.⁸⁰

The reasonable apprehension of danger is the main ingredient which, all the circumstances considered, will, on the ground of cruelty, induce the divorce court to interfere and pronounce the sentence. Such was the English doctrine as expounded by Lord Stowell, Sir John Nicholl, and Dr. Lushington, and such is the doctrine as stated to-day by Mr. Bishop.⁸¹ Inasmuch, then, as divorce for cruelty is mainly allowed as a protection against probable anticipated cruelty, where there is no reasonable apprehension that the cruelty will continue,⁸² or where the conduct of the threatening spouse indicates that he does not really intend to carry out his threats divorce will usually be refused.⁸³

Godolphin laid it down that even though the wife had blamelessly fled from her cruel husband, she would have to return if he gave adequate security against a repetition of his misconduct, or else forfeit all claim to alimony.⁸⁴ That, however, offends one's innate sense of justice; for what bonded security against crime can relieve the innocent victim from danger? Sureties may respond in damages, but they cannot prevent the cruel act from being committed upon the first opportunity. No reported instance of modern times confirms such a doctrine; and it is held, on the other hand, that a mere offer of amendment will not absolve the guilty spouse from his misconduct.⁸⁵ Indeed, the language of some of our late cases leads strongly to the inference that legal cruelty already committed, in the shape of a deed of actual violence, is enough of itself to entitle the aggrieved party to a divorce;⁸⁶ for while the heart remains unchanged, one cruel act is likely to be followed by another.

Reasonable apprehension being thus the great essential, menacing words, apart from blows, may the more readily be accepted as ground for a divorce for cruelty. "In these suits," observes Dr. Lushington, "the species of facts most generally adduced are, first, personal ill-treatment, which is of different kinds, such as blows, or bodily injury of any kind; secondly, threats, of such a description as would reasonably excite, in a mind of ordinary firmness, a fear of personal injury."⁸⁷ But the circumstances, of course, should not be light or trifling. There must be reasonable cause for believing that menaces uttered will be carried into effect; and yet at the same time the aggrieved spouse is not compelled to wait until the injury is actually done.⁸⁸

As to language alone, menaces, threats of violence, seriously understood and inducing reasonable apprehension of bodily injury, or even charges of infidelity, made in bad faith and in aggravation thereof, make a strong case.⁸⁹

In most cases the mere use of profanity by one spouse to another will not be a cause for divorce,⁹⁰ but in many States the habitual use of curses and vile language resulting in injury to health is held to be legal cruelty,⁹¹ although only in the presence of the children.⁹² So the repeated application of coarse epithets to a wife, accompanied once by actual bodily harm, and once by threats to take her life, has been held sufficient ground for divorce for cruelty.⁹³

§ 1592. Confession of Crimes.

The husband's confession of his crimes towards others is not cruelty when he is not convicted.³

Cruel and abusive treatment is not shown by evidence that the husband frequently left his wife, who was ill, and on his return boasted to her of his illicit relations with other women, even where his conduct injured her health. "Language may be so irritating and so frequently used as to permit the granting of a divorce because of cruel and abusive treatment when injury to health results from it, but where there is no such purpose—although the libellant's health was severely affected—a divorce cannot be granted on this ground . . . § 1594. Indignities.

Cruelty may be shown by evidence of various acts of indignity.⁶

§ 1595. Improper Relations with Another.

The wife's relations with the hired man may be such cruel treatment as to entitle the husband to a divorce where they destroy his happiness,⁷ and having intercourse with another to the knowledge of the spouse may be cruelty under the more liberal rule.⁸

For a husband openly to consort with loose females and express his preference for them, or to make a brothel out of his own house, is held extreme cruelty in strong instances.⁹ But adultery or lewdness with other women, which the offending husband carries on clandestinely, is not cruelty.¹⁰ § 1596. Compelling Wife to Submit to Abortion.

Compelling the wife to submit to abortion is cruelty.¹¹

§ 1597. Forcing Wife to Associate with Lewd Women.

It may be cruelty for a man to force his wife to associate with a lewd woman.¹² So a divorce may be granted for extreme cruelty where, while the wife was in bed from the effects of a serious operation, the husband introduces into the house as a servant a woman of loose character, who enters their bedroom and commits various improprieties, and where the husband also makes to the wife various remarks as to another woman calculated to drive any pure woman to the verge of insanity, inflicting cruel suffering.¹³ § 1598. Placing Wife in Insane Hospital.

Placing a wife in an insane hospital on reasonable grounds with the intent to protect her is not cruelty.¹⁴ § 1599. Sodomy, Bestiality or Vulgarity.

Acts of bestiality by the husband with others of the male sex may be cruelty.¹⁵

§ 1600. Interference of Others.

Acts or conditions brought on by the interference of others are not legal cruelty unless assented to by the spouse.¹⁶ § 1601. Permitting Indignities by Others.

The husband is chargeable with cruelty where he allows third persons to abuse his wife,¹⁷ and is properly charged with cruelty to the wife exhibited by persons with whom he compels her to live, as he is legally liable for such acts.¹⁸ Furthermore, the husband's failure to resent indecent proposals made to the wife by his hired man, where the husband besides jerked and threw his wife upon the floor when she was about to become a mother, is cruelty in law.¹⁹

Where the husband is too poor to support his wife anywhere than at the home of his mother, and he always treated his wife kindly, but his mother abused the wife, she may leave him and obtain a divorce for cruelty. This decision goes farther than others, as here the husband was without fault.²⁰ § 1602. Accusations of Infidelity.

Cruelty may consist in false charges of infidelity made by one spouse against the other,²¹ whether the injured party is the wife^{21a} or the husband.^{21b} The mere fact that at the time the charges are made the parties are living apart does not necessarily prevent such charges from constituting extreme cruelty.^{21c} It is relevant and important only as it may aid in determining the question whether such charges inflicted grievous mental suffering upon the injured party. While the words and acts were not so aggravating and unbearable as they would have been if the parties had been living together, yet the very fact that it is the spouse who makes the charges must inevitably tend to make them more credible than if made by a stranger, and the effect on the plaintiff's mind would be equally great in the one case as in the other.²² Even the malicious use of opprobrious and foul epithets before others, imputing to the wife a lewd character, may be legal cruelty, as this is the point upon which all virtuous women are most sensitive in § 1606. Abandonment.

Mere abandonment is not cruelty,³² and neither is it cruelty for the wife to leave the husband and refuse to cohabit with him,³³ but abandonment may be one element in a course of treatment constituting cruelty.³⁴

§ 1607. Failure to Provide Proper Support.³⁵

Refusal of a husband to grant proper support may be cruelty,³⁶ but cruelty is not usually constituted by the husband's refusal or inability to provide a home such as she desires,³⁷ or by imposing hardship as in failure to provide a suitable home, clothing or food,³⁸ nor mere neglect to supply food and clothing, at least under circumstances not wanton or heinous, since the wife has usually other remedies for such a case to keep her from suffering,³⁹ nor the denial of necessities or luxuries in general, especially if there be no pecuniary resources.⁴⁰

§ 1608. Turning Spouse Out of House.

It is extreme cruelty where the husband gives the wife all his property and she then turns him out of the house.⁴¹ § 1609. Failure to Care for Husband.

Even where a wife fails to remain at home and care for her sick husband, if he is not dependent solely on her this is not the kind of cruelty which is meant by the statutes.⁴² § 1610. Sexual Intercourse.

Cruelty may consist in forcing the wife to consent to sexual intercourse excessively, resulting in injuring her health,⁴³ or when pregnant,⁴⁴ but persistent efforts by the husband to consummate the marriage are not usually cruelty.⁴⁵

§ 1611. Denial of Sexual Intercourse.

There is some conflict in the decisions as to whether denial of sexual intercourse is a cause of divorce. The results depend largely on the wording of the various statutes, and such refusal has been held not to be "utter desertion"⁴⁶ or "wilful deser-

Unscrupulous intercourse with one's wife after being infected with a venereal disease, so as to communicate it to her, will be cruelty in the eyes of the law.⁵²

DESERTION IN GENERAL.

SECTION 1613. Historical.

1614. Definition.

1615. Ingredients of the Offence.

1616. Distance of Departure.

§ 1613. Historical.

Desertion, or the wilful abandonment of one spouse by the other, was not a recognized cause of divorce under the ecclesiastical law of England, as promulgated at the settlement of this country. Apparently for an injured wife the suit for restitution of conjugal rights, and the sole privileges if the husband was civiliter mortuus, were deemed by those courts a fair substitute, while the husband, whose wife wrongfully deserted him, was perhaps as well off without a sentence of judicial separation as he would have been with one. That public policy, however, was not a solid objection to divorce on this ground, more than for cruelty, may be inferred from Godolphin's commentary,⁵³⁻⁵⁴ which permitted of a new marriage as one at all events innocent, when nothing had been heard of the absent spouse for seven years.

But the English divorce statutes, with, perhaps, a disposition to place the deserted wife and deserted husband on a more equal plane, as well as to put a rational limit, adds to adultery and 53-54. "The civil and canon law do allow of divorce after a long absence, but are not agreed touching the time of that absence." After stating that some held two years a sufficient time, and others five years, he refers to the seven years' absence as operating much like a divorce, and adds that if the wife refuse to dwell with her Christian husband the canon law allows him to leave her. "But the truth is," says this writer, "no absence, be it for any time whatever, doth properly cause a divorce in law." Godol. Ab. 194.

cruelty, "desertion without cause for two years and upwards," as a third cause for judicial separation.⁵⁵

Meanwhile, in most parts of the United States, where divorce is the only remedy to apply to such cases, desertion for a specified period has been a permitted cause for a divorce, perhaps for a limited divorce in the first instance; yet quite commonly, as in the case of adultery and cruelty, for a divorce, ultimately or immediately, from bonds of matrimony. The phraseology of the legislature varies in different States, as in the cause of cruelty; but "wilful desertion," "wilful absence," "wilful, obstinate, and continued desertion," or "wilful and continued desertion," appears to be the common form of expression; while as to the length of time the space of "one," "two," or "three," or even "five" years may be found stated; "three years" being, perhaps, a fair medium for legislators to reckon. On the whole, the offence appears to be the same in principle both in England and the United States, with very rare exceptions, the only statutory variation of consequence being as to the length of desertion which should perfect the right of the injured spouse.⁵⁶

§ 1614. Definition.

Desertion in the divorce law may be defined as a voluntary separation of one party from the other without justification and without intention to return,⁵⁷ and legal desertion means an abandonment without cause, followed by separation for the statutory

When intent formed.—To constitute desertion, it is not necessary that the intent to desert should have been formed at the time the party left his § 1615. Ingredients of the Offence.

It may be laid down that legal desertion, in the present sense of our divorce acts, imports three things: (1) An actual cessation of cohabitation for the period specified; (2) The wilful intent of the absent spouse to desert; (3) Desertion by that spouse against the will of the other. Unless these three things concur, there is no legal desertion established such as to justify a divorce in the petitioner's favor.⁶⁴ Thus, if the husband leaves his wife in his house, and subsequently returns, with her consent, so as to see the children habitually, though he does not cohabit with her, this is not legal desertion.⁶⁵ Or, if an ill-treated wife tells her husband that either he must leave the house or else she will, his leaving her will not amount to desertion, so as to give her ground of divorce, for this is compliance with her own wishes.⁶⁶ Or, if the spouses are merely shown to have lived separate, the husband rendering no support to the wife, this is not legal desertion.⁶⁷ In short, a separation procured by artful effort, or by mutual consent, or by a ready acquiescence in a request, cannot be construed into legal desertion, so as to constitute the basis of a suit for divorce like the present; for, if it could, all discontented couples might find a way of procuring their freedom very readily, with little scandal and delay, by living apart for one, two, or three years, as the case might be.⁶⁸ home, but it is sufficient if he afterwards determines to desert, and persist in such determination. Foot v. Foot, 71 N. J. Eq. 273, 65 A. 205.

It is immaterial whether the spouse who in effect means to desert removes to a greater or less distance, except so far as distance might serve to illustrate the motives of either conjugal party, the test being, of course, the intent to abandon.⁶⁹

DURATION OF DESERTION.

§ 1617. Beginning of Desertion.

The beginning of the desertion is the time of actual separation and not merely the time when separation is talked about or determined on.⁷⁰

Desertion because of the misconduct of the other party does not begin until after the offending party has in good faith exhausted all reasonable efforts to right the wrong, and to satisfy the injured spouse that there will be no recurrence of the cause which induced the separation, nor until the lapse of a reasonable time for a consideration of the overtures for a reconciliation.⁷¹

And as to the intent to abandon, policy requires that it continue for a certain length of time, without insisting that it commences at the precise date of separation. Thus a spouse might leave home intending to take a journey, to visit friends and the like, and, upon reflection, or while subject to sinister influences from without, conclude to permanently abandon, and act accordingly. Where such is the case, desertion commences, in the legal sense, from the time that purpose is formed by the absent spouse and acted upon, contrary, as all the circumstances may consistently indicate, to the wish of the other.⁷²

§ 1618. Temporary Absence.

Temporary absence on business or pleasure is not desertion.⁷³

§ 1619. Duration of Desertion.

The laws of most States require a certain period of desertion, which must be alleged and proved.⁷⁴

The statutory period must have run before the filing of the complaint,⁷⁵ and the period of desertion is that immediately preceding the filing of the suit.⁷⁶

Under some statutes the whole statutory period of desertion must have taken place while the libellant is living in the State where he brings his suit.⁷⁷ statutory period, the court should exercise its discretion under the circumstances as to the period required.⁷⁸ § 1620. Time During Which Divorce Suit Pending.

The bona fide withdrawal from cohabitation for adverse judicial proceedings, such as procuring a nullity of marriage, or bringing a libel for divorce because of the partner's adultery, is not to be alleged as legal desertion on the part of such spouse, whatever the fate of the suit, or reasonable delays attending it, for this is not wilful and wrongful;⁷⁹ and hence the time during which a suit between married persons for divorce is pending cannot be counted in reckoning the period of desertion if the divorce action was begun in good faith,⁸⁰ but not otherwise;⁸¹ and a party whose purpose is wilful desertion cannot make legal proceedings he may have instituted furnish a fraudulent pretext for his misconduct.⁸²

§ 1621. Imprisonment or Insanity.

As desertion in the legal sense must be voluntary, there is naturally some conflict in the decisions on the question whether absence of a spouse in jail or in an insane asylum is such voluntary absence as to constitute legal desertion. Under some statutes time spent in prison should not be counted,⁸³ and in some States an action for divorce cannot be granted on the ground that the parties have lived apart for the statutory period, where the separation was caused by the confinement of the defendant in the insane asylum or in jail, as the statute implies a voluntary living apart.⁸⁴

According to the weight of authority, however, desertion may be predicated on the absence of the husband in prison even if the statute requires voluntary absence, as the imprisonment is not without fault on his part.⁸⁵ And it has been held that though the spouse, once wilfully deserting, spend part of the time in imprisonment, serving out sentences imposed after his departure, this shall not stop the running of that period, to the prejudice of the aggrieved spouse.⁸⁶ The time during which a spouse was insane⁸⁷ or time spent in an insane hospital cannot be counted, as it is not voluntary.⁸⁸ But where the commitment of one spouse was directly procured by the other, different considerations might arise;⁸⁹ and so, too, perhaps, where circumstances show that, despite such confinement, the deserting spouse's return to cohabitation was practicable and actually proposed. prevents nor stops the running of the statute.⁹⁰ Where the whole statutory period elapses before the erring spouse becomes insane the desertion is still a ground for divorce.⁹¹

§ 1622. Presumption of Continuance of Desertion.

As to the lapse of the statutory period of absence, a desertion once begun is presumed to continue until the contrary appears.

§ 1623. Interruption of Desertion.

Statutes authorizing divorce for desertion for a certain statutory period premise a continuous period, and two desertions cannot be added together to make up the necessary statutory time,⁹² and if the wrongful desertion is interrupted even for a time by a resumption of marital relations,⁹³ or offer to resume them, divorce cannot be had for that cause,⁹⁴ as where the complaining party is admitted to the marital bed even if only for one night.⁹⁵

Where the husband has been deserted by his wife for the statutory period, so that he has a complete right to a divorce for desertion, and subsequently cohabits with her voluntarily for four days, this is a complete renewal of the marriage relation between them, and if she subsequently deserted him this is merely a new act of misconduct on her part. The court holds that this is not a mere case of condonation avoided by her renewed desertion, but this is a voluntary act on the part of the libellant, which, by putting an end to the earlier desertion, made it impossible to say that any desertion had continued for the statutory period up to the filing of the libel. It was an absolute removal of the existing cause of divorce, and the fact that it involved also a forgiveness of the past wrong that had been done, cannot diminish its full effect.⁹⁶

The practical effect of this doctrine seems to be that there can be no avoidance of a condonation in case of desertion. If the parties live together as man and wife after the desertion it makes no difference how soon the desertion is renewed; this will not revive the previous right of action for desertion.

If the statutory period was once interrupted, either because of the resumption of cohabitation by mutual assent, or the fact of an offer on the part of the deserting party to return, the computation of time stops, and a barrier is raised. Any later act of desertion must then be reckoned from the commencement of such new desertion, regardless of the prior offence; while the spouse who refuses to cohabit again, upon the other's offer to resume cohabitation, not only becomes debarred from alleging a desertion, but gives to the latter spouse the right of reckoning his or her own period as the party, in point of fact really deserted,⁹⁷ unless, upon a view of all the circumstances, there was good reason why that party should still be forbidden to return.⁹⁸ § 1624. Refusal to Renew Relations After Desertion for Statutory Period.

After the requisite space of time has elapsed without interruption, the right of the deserted spouse to have a divorce becomes perfect; and a refusal under such circumstances to renew cohabitation amounts to no more than insisting upon taking the course the law permits of, and having the marriage union dissolved.⁹⁹ § 1625. Where Wife Leaves Country After Desertion but Before Lapse of Statutory Period.

Desertion for two years is not shown where the parties were married and lived abroad, and the husband left the wife, and three months later she left her home and came to this country and lived two years. He had not deserted her for two years before she left her home, and he was not bound to follow her to this country.¹

DESERTION: INTENT AND CONSENT.

§ 1626. Desertion Must Be Voluntary.

The desertion under the statute must include a voluntary cessation of cohabitation by one spouse against the will of the other.²

§ 1627. Intention of Permanence.

It must appear that the separation was intended to be permanent,³ but a long absence may show determination for permanent separation.⁴

§ 1628. Wilful Desertion.

Wilful intent to desert on the part of the absent spouse must appear in the proof. And, accordingly, a libel cannot be maintained as for desertion where the complainant was the party who really deserted or was otherwise at fault in causing separation.

⁴ Crounse v. Crounse, 108 Va. 108, 60 S. E. 627.

Even where a wife leaves the matrimonial domicile, and returns to her father's house because of her husband's inability to provide for her support, no such desertion is constituted on his part as entitles her to ask for divorce, but she herself rather is remiss.⁵ Nor is such divorce available to her where she leaves him because he gambles besides,⁶ or because he lied to her.⁷

Upon the same principle of wilful desertion, a wife is held actually at fault in deserting where she left her husband on the trivial ground that he would not maintain her rightful authority as a wife over the servants.⁸

Where the statute makes "wilful and malicious desertion" a cause for divorce, a wilful desertion without cause will be sufficient, though there is no malice in fact.⁹

§ 1629. Consent to Separation.

Abandonment by one with the consent of the other does not constitute desertion, as the desertion must be against the will of the complaining party to entitle him to a divorce.¹⁰ But where

It is a defence to a libel for desertion that the separation of the parties was by agreement,¹² but the fact that a wife consents to separation from a husband who ill-treats her is not a reason for denying her a divorce.¹³ § 1630. Insisting on Separation Originally by Consent.

There is some embarrassment found, however, in applying the rule of wilful desertion to parties who have voluntarily separated in the first instance. Separation by mutual consent cannot, we have seen, be construed into legal desertion. But can one of the separating parties, by turning what was voluntary into involuntary on his or her part, fasten upon the other the wilful purpose, if the latter persist in remaining absent, and carrying out the original arrangement? According to the weight of American authority this may be done. In a New Jersey case, in fact, two parties having voluntarily separated, the one made sincere efforts afterwards to terminate that condition, but the other continued stubborn; and it was held that the stubborn party legally deserted from the time the attempt at reconciliation commenced.¹⁴

Much earlier a New York case decided, and upon a broader application of the doctrine, that where separation originated in mutual consent, and the husband continued to furnish support to his wife for a while, and then wrote a letter which indicated that further maintenance would be withheld by him until formal proceedings were had for divorce, the husband deserted in fact, his desertion beginning not later than the time when that letter was written.¹⁵

In one or two cases, however, the view is taken rather that where spouses have once voluntarily separated, wilful desertion cannot be predicated afterwards of either party who is content to continue absent as originally agreed upon.¹⁶ To this latter view Mr. Bishop does not subscribe; and he refers properly to the suit for restitution of conjugal rights by way of suggesting that, even if such were the English rule, American courts would, with less reason, adopt it, inasmuch as complainants in American courts could not have recourse to that remedy for breaking up the arrangement to live apart.¹⁷

"A consent to a separation," says this writer, "is a revocable act; and if parties separate by consent, and one of them afterward, in good faith, seeks a reconciliation, but the other refuses to return; or if they separate for cause, and the cause is removed, but one of them declines to renew the cohabitation; or if a wife, having left her husband without cause, comes back to him, and he will not receive her; or if the husband, after deserting his wife, proposes to renew the cohabitation, and she rejects his proposal, the full statutory period not having elapsed; this is a desertion, by the one refusing, from the time of the refusal. But to entitle a person to a divorce under such circumstances, the offer of return must be made in good faith, it must be free from improper qualifications and conditions, and it must be really intended to be carried out in its spirit if accepted. And in all cases the legal desertion ends with the intent to desert; for instance, it ends when the erring party undertakes to come back and is prevented. If the wife is restrained by her parents from rejoining her husband, the court, on proper application, will remove the restraint."

The more recent cases show that it may be a desertion for one wrongfully to prolong a desertion which was not originally a cause for divorce, as where a wife is deserted by her husband and she fails to sue for a divorce for many years and refuses to resume marital relations,¹⁸ or where the wife leaves her husband's home with the intention of returning and subsequently refuses his request to return.¹⁹

Where the separation was originally by mutual consent there must be evidence that the consent was withdrawn and that one of the parties demanded a return of marital duties to render it desertion²⁰ as understood in divorce within the statutory

Mere lapse of time does not cause

period.²¹ And where the wife, who has wilfully deserted, repents, and it is her husband's compulsory conduct, not her own obstinacy, which causes the absence to continue further for the statutory period, the husband is not entitled to a divorce.²²

A husband deserts, in the legal sense, where he leaves his wife, promising to return presently, and then fails to return, though requested and promising to do so; and here the statutory period having expired while he continues absent, the wife may have her divorce.²³

A separation followed by repeated negotiations for return to each other is not an abandonment within the statute.²⁴

A hasty request or permission to depart is not conclusive against the spouse deserted. As to the wife, for instance, it is held that if she tells the husband to go his way, and then immediately retracts, and yet he in a passion leaves her, makes no later attempt at reconciliation, contributes nothing to her support, communicates nothing, and gives no opportunity for a return of domestic harmony, she may procure her divorce for his desertion at the expiration of the statute period.²⁵ § 1631. Subsequent Separation Agreement Avoids Desertion.

What may have been desertion in its inception may by later consent within the statutory period cease to be a ground for divorce,²⁶ and where there was a written agreement for separation this interrupts the period of desertion even though the agreement was at once revoked,²⁷ but acquiescence in the absence of the other because of a fear that he would resume his cruelty does not bar an action for divorce,²⁸ and the fact that the libellant had filed a prior libel for cruelty shows that she does not wish to live with the defendant and requires dismissal of the libel for desertion.²⁹

A divorce for wilful and malicious desertion will be refused where it appears that since the desertion by the wife with her children the husband has sent her money for support and the parties have agreed on the terms of settlement in case a divorce were granted. A deserted party cannot have a divorce who quietly and with resignation accepts the situation and in a polite way aids the deserting spouse and renders her condition easy and pleasant by furnishing means of maintenance or taking any other steps to render the litigation mutually satisfactory.³⁰ § 1632. Duty of Deserting Spouse to Seek Renewal of Cohabitation.

It is the duty of the deserting spouse to return within the statutory period, and in case he does or makes proper overtures for renewal of conjugal relations this cures the desertion,³¹ but a return after the statutory period will not suffice.

It may be a defence to the wife's action for her to leave her husband and write him that she would never again live with him,³³ but her refusal, pending divorce proceedings, to resume relations with him is no ground for denial of relief to her.³³ § 1633. Duty of Deserted Spouse to Seek Renewal of Cohabitation.

Cases go so far in their opposition to a voluntary separation as to require active effort on the part of the deserted spouse to induce the erring one to return, wherever opportunity for such inducement existed, and the act of desertion was not committed under heinous circumstances. Thus, a husband's petition for divorce on the ground of desertion has been refused, where it appeared that the wife would have returned had he invited her to do so, and he took no pains to bring her back.³⁴ So a divorce for wilful and obstinate desertion should not be granted where the wife leaves the husband and returns to her parents, where a child is born, and the husband fails to do anything to induce her to return or to do anything to take care of his child.³⁵

The essence of the wrong of desertion by the wife consists in her become reconciled, immediately upon his wife's offer to return after leaving him, was a wilful desertion by him. Epley v. Epley, 83 N. J. Eq. 214, 89 A. 1028.

A deserted spouse cannot prevent the other from terminating the period of desertion, so as to prevent the acquisition of a ground for divorce, by refusing to resume marital relations; but, when the desertion has continued through the statutory period, the deserted one may rely upon his acquired right and refuse to renew cohabitation. Luper v. Luper (Ore. 1908), 96 P. 1099.

Where the court in a suit by a wife for divorce on the ground of cruelty determined that the husband was not at fault, it became the duty of the wife, who had left her husband's home, to return to the home and demand the support to which she was entitled before she could maintain a suit for abandonment subsequently accruing. Stay v. Stay, 53 Wash. 534, 102 P. 420.

refusing to live with her husband when he wants her to live with him. When a husband, not entirely blameless for the act, makes no effort to prevent his desertion by his wife, and acquiesces in and appears satisfied with its continuance, he is not entitled to a divorce on the ground of desertion.

Marital duty requires even an aggrieved spouse to repair rather than widen the breach when slight differences have arisen, and generously to pardon an error hastily committed, if trivial of itself, and followed quickly by repentance. Especially does this hold true of a husband's conduct towards his wife; for to encourage a woman, ever so slightly, to withdraw from the protection of the home, is to invite her irretrievable ruin; his judgment should be sounder than hers, and in this respect the measure of his generosity should be ampler.

It is not to be insisted upon, however, that the spouse who is in the right, even though the stronger, shall yield to the weaker, if the latter deliberately and persistently fails in the conjugal duties, or sacrifice self-respect in the effort to bring back the erring. Hence, a husband, whose wife has deserted him without cause, and remains away after full opportunity to realize the folly of her act, need not attempt to induce her to return when it is clear that the effort to do so would be unavailing; and in due time he may procure his decree.³⁶

If a wife wilfully deserts her husband he is under no legal obligation to attempt to induce her to return,³⁷ and he is not bound

The failure of a husband to attempt to induce his wife to return to him removes from her desertion the element of obstinacy, and such desertion is not a ground for divorce under a statute providing that to render a desertion ground for divorce the de-

to attempt to induce her to return if it is clear that any such effort will be unavailing.³⁸ So where the wife leaves the husband and offers to return only on condition that he shall give her more money and let her pay the household bills, and that they shall have separate rooms, and takes away the furniture in his absence and sues him for alimony, this shows such settled determination to leave him that any overtures made by the husband to induce her to return would have been entirely futile, and he is excused from making them.³⁹

If her desertion, however, is on account of his unkind treatment, it is his duty to make advances in a sincere effort to induce her to return, and only in case of her refusal does her absence become desertion,⁴⁰ and the wife's desertion is not obstinate where the separation is partly the fault of the husband and he makes no

A desertion can only be adjudged obstinate within the statute relating to divorce when it has resisted such efforts or concessions as the party alleging desertion ought, under the particular circumstances, to have made to prevent it or to bring it to an end, though the conduct of the deserting party may be of such a nature that the desertion will be deemed obstinate without any effort on the part of the deserted party to prevent or terminate it. Kipp v. Kipp, 77 N. J. Eq. 585, 78 A. 682. See Purnell v. Purnell (N. J. 1908), 70 A. 187 (if it appears that an honest effort at reconciliation will be fruitless the husband need not make it).

Unwise attempt at reconciliation. Where it appeared that defendant, without sufficient cause, abandoned the common domicile, it was no defence that the husband may have pursued an unwise course in attempting to induce her to return. Wheeler v. Britton, 134 La. 63, 63 So. 624.

attempt to effect a reconciliation.⁴¹ Hence it is no bar to the wife's suit for divorce for the husband's desertion that she did not desire him to return where her feelings were the result of his cruel treatment of her.⁴²

The wife is not bound by the same rule as the husband, requiring her to invite her deserting spouse to return.⁴³

§ 1634. Offer to Return and Refusal.

Where the wife leaves the husband's house and then offers to return, and he refuses to take her back, he is guilty of desertion,⁴⁴ or is away for a short period and wants to come back,⁴⁵ and it may be said in general that if the deserting party in good faith offers to return, and the offer is refused this is desertion on the part of the other party who refuses.⁴⁶

Refusal by a wife of an offer made in good faith for reconciliation is desertion, although she has been granted separate maintenance,⁴⁷ but a colorable offer to return is not sufficient to terminate the desertion.⁴⁸

living together,⁵³ but not where her physical condition will not allow intercourse safely, and the mere fact that the husband and wife sleep in separate beds or separate rooms is no legal evidence of abandonment.⁵³ § 1637. Abandonment as Ground for Separation.

Abandonment may be a distinct ground for separation,⁵⁴ and the absence of the husband from the State without providing for her will justify the wife in a separation for abandonment.⁵⁵

§ 1638. Non-Support.

Living apart from the wife without supporting her or letting her know where he is, and living with another woman, is evidence

Raymond v. Raymond, (N. J. Ch. 1909), 79 A. 430. (A spouse's wilful refusal to engage in sexual intercourse is desertion under the statute, making desertion ground for divorce, and hence, where a husband refused to consummate the marriage by sexual intercourse, he deserted his wife, even though he supported her, and they lived under the same roof.)

of wilful desertion,⁵⁶ as is absence for a number of years with failure to support.⁵⁷

Wilful desertion may be shown by various acts of cruelty accompanied by failure to provide and abandonment,⁵⁸ but not by even failure to support if it appears that the parties had not ceased communication with each other.⁵⁹ Non-support when coupled with neglect will be ground for separation,⁶⁰ and failure of the husband to provide a suitable home and support is justification to the wife in leaving him,⁶¹ but mere non-support does not warrant the wife in leaving her husband and suing for divorce on the ground of desertion,⁶² and ability to provide must be shown.⁶³

The husband's conduct may be such that a demand and refusal to support may be inferred.⁶⁴ § 1639. Non-Support as Reason for Desertion.

The husband cannot obtain a divorce for desertion for her act in leaving him because of his inability to support her, where she is willing to return as soon as he showed any ability to support her properly.⁶⁵ But where she leaves him because he is not able to support her in the style to which she is accustomed, and does not intend to return, this is desertion.⁶⁶

A statute providing for divorce for non-support does not apply where the husband's failure to provide arises from the mental or physical disease of the husband,⁶⁷ and it is not desertion on the part of the husband where he is turned out of her father's house and is unable to furnish his wife a home.⁶⁸

Where the wife consents to a separation due to the inability of the husband to furnish a family domicile this is not a desertion.⁶⁹

§ 1640. Support of Deserted Wife.

The fact that the deserting husband supports his wife during her absence is not a bar to her action for divorce for desertion,⁷⁰ and there is an abandonment where the husband ceases to live with his wife although he continues to provide for her.⁷¹

§ 1641. Wife's Refusal to Live in Home Provided.

Since the husband has the right to choose the matrimonial domicile, according to the principles of universal law, elsewhere dwelt upon,⁷² the wife's persistent and continued refusal, without full justification, to live with her husband at the place honestly and rationally selected by him for the family abode, constitutes legal desertion on her part, and entitles him to a divorce.⁷³

73. Hunt v. Hunt, 29 N. J. Eq. 96;

§ 1642. Wife's Refusal to Live with Husband's Parents.

It is often held that it is not desertion for the wife to refuse to live with the husband's parents.⁷⁵ "The unexplainable dislike, sometimes, of husbands, as well as wives, for their mothers-in-law, is a part of the history and traditions of our race, and, though usually such dislike is foolish and unwarranted, each will have an opinion upon this subject somewhat in accordance with his experiences."⁷⁶

It does not constitute a cause for divorce for desertion that the wife leaves the husband rather than live with him at his parents' home with his parents, with whom she is living unhappily, especially where the parents are well able financially to have a home of their own. A just and affectionate husband should not confront his wife with a decision of either living unhappily with him at his parents' home or living separate and apart from him at another place.⁷⁷ "It is the duty of the husband to provide a home for his wife, where she is recognized by its inmates as the household mistress, and when the husband subjects his wife in the management of her household affairs to the interference of his mother, and by words and acts assails her conduct and reputation to such an extent that she cannot endure it, and leaves the home for that reason, her desertion may be wilful, but it does not become obstinate" unless, after a bona fide attempt to effect a reconciliation, the wife refuses to return. The husband proves no such bona fide attempt by merely showing that he has written two letters to his wife offering her a home under the old conditions. In this case it appeared that in the quarrels between the two women the husband had either remained neutral or taken the part of his mother, and has never visited his wife since her separation, although living in the same city. Therefore the husband cannot obtain a divorce for desertion.⁷⁸ § 1643. Wife's Refusal to Follow Husband in Change of Domicile.

It is desertion for the wife to refuse to follow the husband in his change of domicile,⁷⁹ to a suitable home,⁸⁰ only if the husband requests her to follow him,⁸¹ but not where the husband does not provide a proper home at his new domicile.⁸²

The husband will not be granted a divorce for desertion where the wife refuses to follow him to a new home and leave the double house where they are living, in the other half of which her mother is living and helping her with the work and with the household expenses, where the wife is so ill that she cannot run the house without help and the husband has no means to pay for it. The court remarks that while it is true that as a rule the wife must follow the husband and accept the home that he offers her, still, where she is unable physically and mentally to assume the care of a home, there is no law, human or divine, which justifies him in requiring her to attempt the impossible or which imposes upon her the obligation to leave a mother who is able and willing to afford her that aid and comfort which her husband's means do not enable him to afford.⁸³

A refusal of a wife of an officer in the army to follow her husband to another State, to which he has been ordered by his superior officers, is desertion for which he may obtain divorce.⁸⁴ So, too, where they have lived at her father's house, and the husband, upon provocation from her father, or for some other just cause, leaves the house, and requests his wife to accompany him, she ought to do so, and, at the least, her persistent refusal to obey him debars her from construing his consequent absence into legal desertion.⁸⁵ Mere refusal to agree to a new home is not enough. There must be an actual acquisition of a new domicile and her refusal to go to it.⁸⁶

§ 1644. Forcing Spouse to Leave.

It does not follow necessarily, according to the current of divorce precedents, that the party who deserts, in the legal sense, withdraws as of course from the matrimonial abode; for one who wilfully and wrongfully draws the matrimonial abode away from the other, so to speak, while remaining in it alone, becomes amenable to that charge; it is enough to have discontinued cohabitation wilfully and without justification.⁸⁷ Stratagem will not here avail more than violence in producing so unhappy a state of things, for it is blame in either spouse as to bringing about the separation that the law chiefly regards.⁸⁸ This, however, is not tantamount to declaring that cruel treatment by one spouse, whatever that spouse may have intended, constitutes desertion of the other, so that there arises of necessity a choice of grounds; but that, when carried so far that the latter spouse has to leave, the circumstances will raise a presumption that the cruel partner thereby purposed bringing about the separation, which presumption his acquiescence afterwards in the continuous absence will render almost conclusive against him.⁸⁹ Probably, if both spouses were shown equally at fault in producing the separation, neither could claim a divorce.⁹⁰

If the wife leaves the matrimonial abode because of the husband's gross misconduct, his personal violence, coarse abuse or threats, and persistent neglect of duty, whatever her rights, he cannot avail himself of her departure as legal desertion so as to obtain a divorce on his own application.⁹¹

Furthermore, if he drives his wife from the house by cruel treatment, it is not enough that she may allege cruelty in her libel, but this is frequently held to constitute, besides, the offence of legal desertion on his part.⁹²

INDIGNITIES.

§ 1649. In General.

As to "offering indignities," whether it be to a wife's person, "so as to render her condition intolerable and her life burdensome," or, in a reciprocal sense, so that either spouse may complain when aggrieved, the object of our numerous local statutes which specify this cause of divorce appears to be to punish conduct which produces, strictly speaking, no apprehension of bodily harm in the complainant, and yet is, so to speak, cruel and unkind. Publicity seems to be reckoned an important element in this class of cases, where apprehension of danger was not immediate, so that the offended spouse must have been wounded by being disgraced in the eyes of others. So "indignities to the person" and "cruel and barbarous treatment" are two distinct causes of divorce.⁶

The indignities need not be such as to endanger life or health, ⁶ Fay v. Fay, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 328.

but it is sufficient if the treatment is such as to render the condition of the ordinary person intolerable.⁷

§ 1650. More Than One Act Necessary.

One act of indignity is not enough where the statute provides for divorce for indignities.⁸

§ 1651. Violence.

The phrase "indignities to the person" receives sometimes a literal interpretation,⁹ and violent, contemptuous and insulting conduct will as a matter of course be classed as an indignity where unmerited.¹⁰

§ 1652. Abuse and Quarrels.

Indignities may be found in constant abuse,¹¹ and the abusive language need not have been used in the presence of another,¹² but it is not an indignity where the abusive language used was justified by the conduct of the other.¹³ Merely faultfinding¹⁴ or criticising

CHAPTER XXII.

OTHER CAUSES OF DIVORCE.

- SECTION 1665. Cohabitation Rendered Unsafe or Intolerable.
 1666. Violent Temper.
 1667. Incompatibility.
 1668. Public Defamation.
 1669. Neglect of Duty.
 1670. Non-Support.
 1671. Living Apart.
 1672. Absence Unheard of.
 1673. Joining Shakers.
 1674. Sodomy; Bestiality.
 1675. Any Cause Deemed Sufficient.

§ 1665. Cohabitation Rendered Unsafe or Intolerable.

In some States a cause for divorce is any conduct rendering cohabitation unsafe or sometimes the language is conduct rendering cohabitation intolerable.

Conduct rendering cohabitation unsafe may appear where the wife poisons the husband's food.³⁹

The fact that the husband's frequent intoxication was so connected with acts of cruelty as to render cohabitation unsafe may be shown as a cause of divorce.⁴⁰

Cohabitation is not rendered unsafe by impulsive acts at long intervals,⁴¹ or where the wife forges the husband's signature,⁴² or where the husband has consumption,⁴³ and the husband's adultery does not render it unsafe for the wife to cohabit.⁴⁴

43. Abramowitz v. Abramowitz, 140 N. Y. S. 275.

44. Allen v. Allen, 110 N. Y. S. 303, 125 App. Div. 838.

The communication to the wife by the husband of a loathsome disease is such conduct as renders her condition intolerable.⁴⁵

"Gross misbehavior and wickedness repugnant to and inconsistent with the marriage contract" authorizes a divorce under a Rhode Island statute. But it appears that loving and keeping company with another woman is not an offence within this statute, if the intimacy does not extend to adulterous intercourse.⁴⁶

§ 1666. Violent Temper.

In Florida habitual indulgence in ungovernable temper is a cause for divorce when rendering the performance of marital duties impracticable,⁴⁷ but mere ungovernable temper is not ordinarily a ground for divorce.⁴⁸

§ 1667. Incompatibility.

Incompatibility of temper and evidence that a couple can no longer live together harmoniously is no ground for a divorce,⁴⁹ except in some States, where the cause of inability to live together is not the fault of the plaintiff.⁵⁰

46. Stevens v. Stevens, 8 R. I. 557. "Grossly immoral conduct, rendering impossible the bringing up of the issue of the marriage properly," is held insufficient cause of divorce in Pennsylvania. Miles v. Miles, 76 Pa. St. 357.

§ 1668. Public Defamation.

In some States public defamation of the character of the spouse is a distinct ground for separation,⁵¹ but a confidential statement to relatives and friends is not a public defamation under such a statute.⁵²

§ 1669. Neglect of Duty.

"Gross neglect of duty" is a specific cause of divorce under some of our local codes. This, we are to understand, may not comprehend the husband's abandonment and refusal to furnish adequate support to his wife,⁵³ but the failure of a husband to support his wife when able to do so is neglect of duty,⁵⁴ although such duty is not performed so as to bar divorce where the husband merely pays his wife an allowance under order of court.⁵⁵

Passive neglect of duty, if made a ground of divorce, might be thought better related to desertion than cruelty, which is usually active and aggressive in operation.⁵⁶

Neglect of duty may consist in putting away the husband in an insane asylum without cause,⁵⁷ and refusal of sexual intercourse may be "gross neglect of duty."⁵⁸

Turner v. Turner, 82 Wash. 518, 144 P. 689; Freeburn v. Freeburn (Wash.), 182 P. 620.

58. Leach v. Leach, 46 Kan. 724, 27 P. 131; contra, McKinney v. McKinney, 9 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 655.

§ 1670. Non-Support.

Mere failure to support is not a ground for divorce in the absence of direct provision to that effect,⁵⁹ especially where the husband had supported his family until a short time before the action,⁶⁰ or where the wife had left him without good cause,⁶¹ or where he tries in good faith to support his family and fails.⁶²

But statutes sometimes enumerate specially, among causes of divorce, the gross and wanton and cruel refusal or neglect of the husband, being of sufficient ability, to provide suitable maintenance for his wife.⁶³ The length of time which must elapse in such cases to perfect the complainant's remedy is less, usually, than in ordinary desertion; nor is desertion a requisite, but, on the other hand, the judicial inclination appears to be against permitting mere neglect on the husband's part, without aggravating circumstances, to be thus set up against him;⁶⁴ or a failure to provide, where the wife was not thereby left destitute,⁶⁵ or where the husband has not suitable means or capacity for providing support.⁶⁶

In such States a wife can obtain a divorce for non-support where the husband, having sufficient ability, without just cause fails to provide support,⁶⁷ or the wife may obtain a decree for separation for non-support.⁶⁸ A divorce for non-support will not be ordered where the husband makes fair provision for his family,⁶⁹ or where the wife did not request or need support from the husband,⁷⁰ or where the wife leaves the husband.⁷¹ Wanton and cruel neglect and failure to furnish the wife with support as a ground for divorce is not shown by the husband's failure to support for five years while she was living with her parents, who died and left her some money, and while she was running a boarding-house, where the failure was caused by his misfortune in losing his position and failure to find another for some time on account of the panic of 1907. Neither misfortune nor incompetence resulting in a failure to support affords the wife any ground for relief under the law. The possibility of such a result was one of the hazards she assumed when she married him.⁷²

§ 1671. Living Apart.

In some States the statute makes living apart for a certain period without cohabitation a cause for divorce,⁷³ and such living

That a husband does not give his wife money is not of itself a failure to support. Donley v. Donley, 150 Mo. App. 660, 131 S. W. 356.

That a man occasionally gambled and speculated in stocks and thereby lost money is not a sufficient ground for divorce, where as a general rule he made liberal provision for the support of his family. Cadieaux v. Cadieaux, 180 Mich. 99, 146 N. W. 161.

apart constitutes ground for divorce although under a decree for separation,⁷⁴ but even under such a statute the divorce will not be granted where the separation was due to the fault of the person asking for it.⁷⁵

Under such a statute, however, it has been held that the fact that a decree for divorce from bed and board had already been granted does not affect the rights of the parties to divorce for separation, and the time during which they were living apart under the former decree may be counted in computing the statutory period of separation. The fact that the separation was caused by the fault of the present plaintiff is not a bar to his action, as the legislature has evidently considered that the divorce should take place in such case regardless of the cause of the trouble.⁷⁶ Divorce may be granted where the separation was in part but not entirely due to the insanity of one of the parties.⁷⁷

§ 1672. Absence Unheard of.

The absence of one of the spouses for a fixed number of years without "being heard of," when permitted to serve as a ground of divorce, upon due lapse of time and strictness of proof, may be said to furnish to the forsaken partner an opportunity of marrying once more, while relieved of those painful risks as to the validity

To constitute a "voluntary separation" of husband and wife for a period of five years next preceding the commencement of the action a ground of divorce, it must appear that the separation was mutually voluntary in its inception, and so continued throughout the statutory period. Sanders v. Sanders, 135 Wis. 613, 116 N. W. 176. of the new union which we have considered in connection with bigamous marriages.

§ 1673. Joining Shakers.

But other statute causes of divorce may here be stated which are closely allied to desertion. One of these is the offence of joining the Shakers, or, to speak more exactly, of uniting and continuing with some society which holds the relation of husband and wife unlawful.⁷⁸ Under statutes which run thus, it is held that if both husband and wife join the society, and afterwards one of them withdraws, such party may treat a refusal of the other to resume the marital relation as constituting the offence in question. A specific period of continuance in such society is usually set by such statutes, the lapse of which perfects the right to a divorce.⁷⁹

§ 1674. Sodomy; Bestiality.

Sodomy and other unnatural and bestial practices are referable to this same head of sexual infidelity; and it is observable that, while such offences are scarcely ever mentioned in American divorce acts,⁸⁰ the English Divorce Statute, 20 & 21 Vict., c. 85, specifies them, together with incestuous adultery, bigamous adultery, adultery coupled with cruelty, and rape, as causes of marriage dissolution, on the wife's petition; all such carnal deeds quite transcending, in its purview, the offence of simple adultery, so far as a husband may have committed it.

Vulgar, indecent and unnatural conduct of the wife and her solicitation of the husband to engage in such conduct with her is not cause for divorce as acts of mere degradation and degeneracy in one of the parties are not grounds of divorce unless made so by statute.⁸¹

§ 1675. Any Cause Deemed Sufficient.

Statutes in some States provide that a divorce may be granted for any cause deemed by the court sufficient,⁸³ and in a few American States the legislature has invited great abuse of divorce facilities within its local jurisdiction, by further providing that, at the discretion of the court, divorce may be granted "for any other cause."⁸³ In Maine, too, the Revised Statutes allow a divorce from the bonds of matrimony to be decreed by any judge of the Supreme Court "when, in the exercise of a sound discretion, he deems it reasonable and proper, conducive to domestic harmony, and consistent with the peace and morality of society."⁸⁴ An unlimited discretion of this character, though confided more safely to the judiciary, perhaps, than any other department of government—since in the United States the courts are almost invariably found more conservative than either branch of the legislature—is, indeed, exceedingly dangerous, the more so that it leaves rights and remedies pertaining to the domestic life precarious, which ought, of all things, to be secure and sacred. And Mr. Bishop has expressed his preference for statutes which leave rather this discretion to be exercised within well-defined limits, such, for instance, as permitting divorce to be pronounced in a case which comes within the reason of the causes specified by the legislative intention, though perhaps without its literal expression as illumined by judicial precedents.

In one Indiana case, under such a provision, it was said that, in order to enable the court to exercise its discretion, there ought to be an injured party, for to such persons alone relief by divorce could be afforded.⁸⁵ Again, it is said, some cause for divorce is requisite.⁸⁶ And, generally, we may assume that the discretion to be exercised in such cases is a judicial one, limited by the rules appropriate to tribunals of justice, and not an arbitrary and fluctuating discretion, such as a legislature not unfrequently exercises.⁸⁷ And yet the statute range permitted by acts of this character is so broad that much must be left after all to the conscience of the presiding judge.

In Iowa, whose old code provides that a divorce may be decreed where the parties cannot live in peace and happiness together, it is ruled that the chancellor must be fully satisfied of the facts, and that the moral, social, and mental welfare of the parties and their children requires a permanent separation. Cases might thus arise, however, where the parties were mutually at fault, and yet a divorce would be decreed.⁸⁸

Under a statute permitting the court to grant a divorce for such cause as it may deem sufficient, one should be granted for any conduct on the part of the husband or wife which is calculated to seriously impair the health or permanently destroy the happiness of the other. The object of the court is not to punish the offender, but to protect the unfortunate; and while a decree should never be granted for slight differences, which are likely to arise in the best of well-regulated families, it should not be denied when it is made clearly to appear that the conduct of the offending party is such § 1676. Invalidity of Marriage.

A divorce will be denied where there is no proper proof of marriage, and proof of a common-law marriage may be enough where such marriage is legal,⁹¹ but the fact that the marriage is voidable is no defence to an action for divorce unless it has been declared void;⁹² and the fact that the marriage had been declared void in another State is a defence to an action of divorce.⁹³

The statute may give the innocent party to the second marriage a right to divorce where a second marriage is entered into with one ignorant of the first marriage.⁹⁴

Where cousins are married prior to the passage of an act making such marriages illegal, the court cannot consider their relationship as bearing on the issues.⁹⁵

The invalidity of the marriage is no defence to an action for separation.⁹⁶

§ 1677. Abatement on Death.

No decree in divorce can be entered after death of one of the parties,⁹⁷ except by statute,⁹⁸ and a decree nisi cannot be made absolute after death of either party.⁹⁹

The action for divorce is personal and the death of one of the parties eliminates the controversy, hence a decree of divorce cannot be set aside after the death of one of the parties,¹ but the decree may after death be reopened to determine property rights,² and the action may survive as to judgment for alimony and the rights of third persons.³

§ 1678. Estoppel as Defence.

A divorce will not usually be denied on the ground of estoppel, as the married state is a matter of public interest.⁴

Where the defendant, knowing the facts, assured plaintiff that her former marriage was invalid to induce her to marry him, he is barred from setting up this former marriage in defence of an action for divorce,⁵ and this defence cannot be set up where both parties mistakenly believed the marriage was legal.⁶

§ 1679. Insanity.⁷

While a divorce will not be granted for acts committed during insanity, a divorce may be obtained for acts happening prior thereto notwithstanding the subsequent insanity.⁸ So desertion may be committed and a divorce obtained therefor although the defendant become insane before the action was brought, where he was of sound mind when the desertion for the statutory period occurred.⁹ And a divorce for cruelty will be granted where the cruelty is the result of the defendant's insanely jealous temperament, where no actual insanity appeared,¹⁰ but where the defendant's mental condition rendered him unaccountable this may be a defence.¹¹

Even sexual intercourse by the wife with other men while insane does not constitute adultery, the necessary intent being absent.¹²

Where the court finds both parties insane, the case should be disposed of as public policy and the interests of the parties require.¹³ § 1680. Laches.

An action for divorce may be barred by laches,¹⁴ but the public or the court is not barred from action by laches as it is a general rule that "nothing is concluded against the judge."¹⁵

Delay in bringing an action for divorce on account of impotence may not be a bar, but is a fact to be considered.¹⁶ § 1681. Special Limitations.

Lapse of time appears quite frequently as a material circumstance in connection with the proof elicited for establishing one or another of the main defences we have already considered, in which sense it deserves hardly more than the incidental treatment bestowed upon it in such cases. But lapse of time is found to operate more widely as a bar to divorce proceedings, and such plea may be set up on the usual theory of limitations. "Courts of equity, for the peace of society," it is observed in an American case, "discourage antiquated and stale demands, and, acting on this inherent doctrine, refuse to interfere where there has been a long acquiescence."¹⁷ Want of knowledge would, of course, excuse a delay, but the matrimonial offence once discovered or opened to the wronged spouse's knowledge, divorce proceedings should be promptly instituted and pursued; or else, irrespective of positive inference that the wrong has been willingly condoned or connived at, the plaintiff's remedy is lost; and, in fact, local statutes are found which fix precise limits of time,¹⁸ or, as in England, permit the court at discretion to refuse divorce upon

"unreasonable delay" in presenting or prosecuting the petition.¹⁹

There are special limitations on divorce in various States, as that action must be brought without unnecessary delay,²⁰ or within a certain time after the act complained of,²¹ or within a certain time after desertion,²² or cruelty,²³ or condemnation of felony,²⁴ or indignities,²⁵ or living apart for five years,²⁶ or within a certain time after discovery of the act complained of,²⁷ or within a certain time after judgment for separation.²⁸

Such a statute does not, however, prevent the defendant from setting up in defence acts which occurred more than the statutory period before the beginning of suit.²⁹

Drunkenness in the husband cannot excuse cruel treatment by the wife,³⁶ but the mere fact that the wife falls below the average in the discharge of her marital duties will not excuse the husband in treating her with cruelty.³⁷

§ 1683. Previous Crime by Libellant Is No Defence.

The fact that plaintiff in an action for divorce had sworn falsely some years before in another suit is not sufficient to estop him from pressing his action.³⁸ § 1684. Prior Void Divorce No Defence.

The fact that the libellant had previously obtained a divorce in another State, void by the laws of the State where the present action is brought, does not amount to an estoppel.³⁹ § 1685. Pendency of Another Action.

Where the causes of action are different, one divorce suit is not a bar to another between the same parties,⁴⁰ and an action for divorce based on false statements is no defence to a suit for divorce brought by the other party.⁴¹ So the pendency of an action for divorce in one State does not bar an action for divorce brought by the other party in another State,⁴² and that an order for alimony is enforced in another county is not a defence to divorce.⁴³

43. Main v. Main (Ia.), 163 N. W. 364.

§ 1686. Proceedings for Separation.

The pendency of an action for separation is no bar to a suit for divorce between the same parties,⁴⁴ or to a suit by the wife on a contract by the husband to pay her a weekly amount,⁴⁵ and one against whom a decree for separation has been rendered may be entitled to divorce on waiting the requisite time and showing that no reconciliation has been effected.⁴⁶

In the same way the pendency of a suit for divorce does not abate an action for separation,⁴⁷ and an action for divorce from bed and board brought by the wife is not abated by an action already brought by the husband for divorce a vinculo, as a counter-claim need not be set up in the original action, but may be asserted in a separate action.⁴⁸ The pendency of an action for absolute divorce does not prevent the defendant in that suit from bringing an action for divorce from bed and board in another county where she lives. The relief sought in the later action is not the same as that sought in the earlier, and may be dependant on a different state of facts. It is in general true that the pendency of an action seeking one kind of divorce does not necessarily forbid the maintenance of a suit to secure a divorce of a different kind.⁴⁹ § 1690. Condonation, Nature and Elements of.

Condonation is the conditional forgiveness or remission, by one spouse, of some matrimonial offence of which he or she knows the other to be guilty. And the rule is that while the condition of forgiveness remains unbroken by the former offender, condonation, from whatever motive it may have proceeded, remains an absolute barrier to all divorce remedies founded on that particular grievance. To this extent condonation is accordingly available in defence; the offence itself not being necessarily denied.⁵³

⁵³. Whether condoned offence can be set up in recrimination, see post, § 1729; Davis v. Davis, 134 Ga. 804, 68 S. E. 594; Doose v. Doose, 198 Ill. App. 387; *Ellithorpe v. § 1691. Condonation Is Favored in the Law.⁵⁴

And is a privilege of the injured party alone.⁵⁵ Where the libellee proves condonation he is entitled to a verdict in his favor in a divorce suit,⁵⁶ but it is no defence to an action for annulment of a marriage.⁵⁷

§ 1692. Connivance at Adultery.

Connivance at acts of adultery constitutes condonation.⁵⁸

§ 1693. Knowledge of Offence.

The chief circumstance of importance in all cases of condonation, and an all-important one in cases where the offence was adultery, is that of a permitted cohabitation after knowledge of the offence. The general rule is that any cohabitation with the guilty party, after the commission of a matrimonial offence, if it be upon the injured party's knowledge or belief that adultery was committed, will amount to conclusive evidence that the offence in question has been conditionally forgiven.⁵⁹ No man, says the law, referring to the case of adultery, that most commonly considered under this head, would take a delinquent wife to his bed unless he had really forgiven her; and the same usually holds true of the wife in these days, where the husband was the delinquent instead.

This cohabitation must have occurred not only after the offence was committed, but after the injured party knew, or had reason to believe, that the other spouse was guilty thereof. Circum-

Briggs*, 56 Wash. 580, 106 P. 126 (lewd acts of wife in presence of husband).

Where the conduct of the husband consists in a series of acts the fact that she agreed to live with him until action brought is not condonation. Quient v. Quient (Wash.), 177 P. 779.

Where a husband wilfully deserts his wife, and his desertion, if continued the requisite time, would ripen into a cause of divorce, he waives any condonation of his previous offences against the marriage state. Mathewson v. Mathewson, 81 Vt. 173, 69 A. 646.

The voluntary dismissal of a suit by a wife for divorce for cruelty, and her return to her husband, did not affect her right to subsequently bring a similar action, nor prevent consideration in such action of the entire story of her married life. Goeldner v. Goeldner, 158 Ia. 415, 139 N. W. 889.

stances arousing the innocent partner's suspicions are insufficient; for, while in this frame of mind, one might well avoid altercation for the sake of eliciting better the truth, or perhaps completing the proof essential to a suit so painful in arousing antagonism as that for divorce must always be. Hence it is said that for cohabitation to bar the husband's remedy, it should be continued with his knowledge, not only of the offence committed, but of his ability to prove it,⁶⁰ but mere suspicious circumstances are not enough,⁶¹ as where the husband tells the wife that his venereal disease was an innocent cause and she believes him.⁶² The knowledge upon which a further cohabitation affords presumption of condonation, however, is probable knowledge as courts usually state it.⁶³ The limitation seems to be thus stated, however, in order that the injured spouse may not stultify himself by believing against evidence; for, after all, judicial investigation should be directed to the point whether the innocent spouse chose to forgive, believing that the exercise of forgiveness was at his option.

Condonation takes place after clear and convincing knowledge of the offence is brought home to the libellant, who thereafter cohabits with the libellee,⁶⁴ and full knowledge of the serious short time may not.⁶⁸ The presumption is that spouses occupying the same dwelling-house or place of abode cohabit in the full nuptial sense; but that presumption is not conclusive and admits of rebuttal,⁶⁹ and sleeping in the same house, but in a separate room from the spouse, is not condonation.⁷⁰

§ 1695. Cohabitation Pending Divorce.

Cohabitation pending the divorce suit condones the offence,⁷¹ even where the condonation took place after commencement of the action for divorce.⁷²

§ 1696. Offer to Renew Cohabitation; Forgiveness.

A mere offer of reconciliation by the wronged spouse may constitute condonation,⁷³ and cruelty in one may be condoned by the other party soliciting reconciliation and renewing cohabitation,⁷⁴ but according to the weight of authority an unaccepted offer to resume intercourse is unavailable to the offender as amounting to condonation, until that offer is accepted, and hence the offer itself may meantime be withdrawn.⁷⁵ Express forgiveness, however, although at once revoked and without renewal of sexual intercourse, is condonation.⁷⁶

So if the wife leaves the husband under an agreement that should she refrain for three months from using intoxicating liquors he will take her back, and she does so refrain and goes back, and he refuses to receive her, this is condonation of her previous drunkenness.⁷⁷

§ 1697. Acts Less Than Cohabitation.

Other circumstances, or express words and acts, may strengthen or weaken, as the case may be, that presumption of condonation which cohabitation of itself affords. Condonation may be inferred, for instance, from neglecting to prosecute a divorce suit already commenced,⁷⁸ or from dismissing it; the result of which, according to the better reason, would be, not that the plaintiff becomes wholly barred from prosecuting the libel, but that, upon violation of the condition of pardon, a divorce libel may be brought for the earlier as well as the later offence.⁷⁹

Affectionate letters are not enough to show condonation,⁸⁰ or undertaking household duties.⁸¹ What constitutes condonation of cruelty is a question of fact.⁸²

§ 1699. What Acts Covered by Condonation.

Several matrimonial offences may be condoned together; and various secret acts of adultery or habitual adultery, with a certain person or persons, may thus be forgiven without actual knowledge of each distinct act; provided only that the proof be appropriate to a condonation so extensive.⁸⁵ Hence reconciliation after general admissions by the guilty party of infidelity condones all past offences, both those known and those unknown at the time,⁸⁶ but a condonation of an offence does not cover an aggravation of it.⁸⁷

§ 1700. Impotency.

§ 1701. Not Readily Inferred Against Wife.

The rule as to inferences of condonation has always been more stringently enforced against the husband than against the wife, and upheld, moreover, chiefly in instances of discovered adultery on her part. Such infidelities rarely fail to place a wife at the absolute mercy of an offended husband, who by throwing her off will make her a social outcast. The husband who condones his wife's adultery is commonly regarded as a disgraced man. But the wife, in a corresponding case, it has lately been remarked, should be pitied rather than blamed, and, especially where she has no separate means, she may be presumed to yield to circumstances beyond her control and hide her shame in patience, with the hope of reclaiming the offender.⁸⁹ Upon such a distinction turn numerous cases which seem to favor the offended wife who cohabits knowingly with an adulterous partner, by declining to draw so readily the presumption that by doing thus she has intentionally condoned and debarred herself conditionally of the right to institute divorce proceedings for the offence.⁹⁰

And yet, the tendency of our times being to place the sexes on an equal footing of right and responsibility, condonation of a husband's adultery, as well as of a wife's, may doubtless be warranted by inference from circumstances of which continuous cohabitation is the chief; and in some instances of the kind the presumption seems to be upheld almost as strongly against the aggrieved spouse of one sex as of the other.⁹¹ And, at all events, no wife can be justified in permitting her husband's concubine to share with her the same house and a polluted bed.⁹²

That marital control and the power to exercise it are given by God's universal law to man rather than woman is the fundamental reason, and a sound one, too, for presuming condonation less readily in a wife than a husband. No condonation, as we have suggested, can be effectual unless voluntary. Hence, a disinclination of courts, in the later cases which have raised that issue, to extend the former presumptions arising out of cohabitation to the case of cruelty. And though the wife should continue cohabiting with her husband after his acts of legal cruelty towards her, it is held that reconciliation should not be conclusively presumed as a barrier to divorce from that circumstance,⁹³ especially where the cohabitacharge against her of infidelity). See Hoe v. Hoe, 122 Ky. 590, 92 S. W. 317, 29 Ky. Law Rep. 113, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909.

tion is continued in the hope of better treatment,⁹⁴ and forbearance of the wife to abandon her husband and bring suit is not always condonation.⁹⁵ Fear, indeed, or the husband's coercion, or the shame of an exposure, may have restrained her; nor is the offence itself such as a generous mind can readily forgive before there is opportunity to forget. We cannot doubt, however, that upon suitable proof of favoring circumstances simply, such as long lapse of time and continuous cohabitation after the cruel act was committed, condonation may be established against a wife as well as a husband, and for this offence as well as any other.⁹⁶ And as to statutory cause for divorce in general, a continuance, or renewal of cohabitation between the parties, may, under favoring accompaniments, be construed into condoning the fault; for reconciliation is human nature's own plea against justice wherever the family relation is concerned.⁹⁷

§ 1702. Wife Unable to Leave at Once.

⁹⁷ Scarcely any cases are to be found which apply the principle of condonation to desertion and kindred offences, and the inapplication here of cohabitation, except by way of renewed intercourse, is obvious. But in Kennedy v. Kennedy, 87 Ill. 250, it was recently held that where a wife without justification refused for more than two years to go to her husband's new home, the fact of his cohabiting with her on one occasion at her brother's house did not bar him of the right to a decree of divorce.

Statutes are found relative to condonation in North Carolina and Louisiana; chiefly with the view of giving to condonation the effect of an absolute barrier to divorce for the condoned offence. See Collier v. Collier, 1 Dev. Eq. 352; Bienvenu v. Buisson, 14 La. Ann. 386.

into forgiveness, while that sickness or constraint operates against such spouse's free will;⁹⁸ and where the continuance of marital relations was a matter of necessity there is no condonation.⁹⁹

Hence there is no condonation where the wife is so injured by the cruel treatment of her husband that she cannot leave her bed for some time and leaves as soon as she is well enough to do so,¹ or where the husband's ill treatment renders the wife irresponsible and she leaves him as soon as she recovers.²

§ 1703. Revival by Repetition of Offence.

The condonation is revoked by a repetition of the offence condoned,³ but this rule does not apply to desertion, as condonation completely renews the marriage relation, and a subsequent desertion must have continued the statutory period before it is cause for divorce.⁴

The revival of the offence condoned may take place by repetition even a long period after the condonation,⁵ but cohabitation for several years may estop from reviving the offence condoned.⁶

Where the repetition of the acts condoned was brought about in part by the acts of the other spouse the condonation may remain.⁷

§ 1704. What Acts Cause Revival.

The condition to be usually inferred from the circumstances, and the implied condition which the present doctrine rests firmly upon, is that the offence shall not be repeated. A repetition of the same injury will certainly do away the condonation, and revive the former grievance as matter for divorce. In other words, the injured spouse is presumed to have trusted to the offender's sense of shame and genuine repentance. But does that repentance extend by implication so as to exact from the offender conjugal kindness in all other respects? Upon this point there have been differences of judicial opinion. The English doctrine is, that the condition of condonation for an act of adultery is broken, not only when a new offence of the same nature is committed, but when the guilty husband afterwards practices cruelty, deserts, or otherwise commits a marital offence.⁸ Such a rule of construction it is found desirable to apply when the condoned act would have been visited with total divorce, but that subsequent with only partial divorce, so that the injured party would not otherwise receive just redress for an aggravated wrong. Hence, perhaps, what might seem otherwise a forced construction of the implied compact of forgiveness, but a construction most commonly accepted, nevertheless, in the United States, though not, we apprehend, accepted⁹ in all parts of this country, nor ever perhaps needful to insist upon where the later offence may be visited with a decree as full and final as the earlier.

With more confidence it may be added that a new offence kindred to the original need not be proved to the same point of heinousness as the original. Thus, cruelty renewed even slightly, after condonation of such an offence, attests the failure of forbearance the most kind and generous an aggrieved spouse can practice, and so disastrous an experiment may well give rise to the worst apprehensions of danger.¹⁰

Any misconduct not necessarily of the same class as that condoned will revive the condoned offence,¹¹ even where the subsequent acts do not form an independent cause of divorce,¹² as condonation is conditioned on future treatment with conjugal kindness,¹³ but slight acts of coldness or unkindness will not revive.¹⁴

Condoned adultery and cruelty, too, may be revived by subsequent misconduct which falls short of adultery.¹⁵ For the injured spouse, as it was observed in an American case, has a right to judge of the future by the past, and the court will connect the whole of the unfaithful partner's conduct in order to form a correct judgment.¹⁶ Judicial inclination, on the whole, is to give to the injured one whose experiment of generosity has thus failed the ample benefit of the original breach of conjugal duty.

Condonation is, however, a legal deduction more commonly from acts than words; and perhaps under special circumstances the express agreement of the parties, consistently acted upon, may be shown to vary the terms of condonation so as to give its condition greater or less scope; while, at the same time, public policy and the legal disabilities of the mutual contract to which married parties are bound should not be forgotten.¹⁷

§ 1705. Effect of Revival.

Repetition of the condoned acts after failure of the suit does not revive the suit, but affords grounds for a new suit.¹⁸

 1720. Insincerity or Collusion as a Defence.

§ 1706. Definition.

Connivance, which is a defence most available in cases of adultery, though applying in other instances, may be defined as the corrupt consenting of a married party to that offence of the spouse for which such party afterwards seeks a divorce.¹⁹

In principle, where there was no corrupt consenting, there no such defence can be appropriate; but in practice, and where inferences must be drawn largely from circumstantial evidence of a negative character, this corrupt consent will be presumed from passive as well as active encouragement of the offence, and conduct amounting in substance to an estoppel.

§ 1707. In General.

It is a defence to an action for divorce that the plaintiff connived ¹⁹ Connivance as condonation, see Con. 144; Phillips v. Phillips, 10 Jur. 1692; Forster v. Forster, 1 Hag. 829; Cairns v. Cairns, 109 Mass. 408.

at the crime charged when adultery,²⁰ and connivance will also be a defence to other matrimonial offences, as the use of drugs.²¹ § 1708. Attempt at Collusion.

The fact that the plaintiff attempted to obtain a divorce by collusion with defendant, who refused to agree, is not a defence.²² § 1709. Agreements to Suppress Evidence and Deceive Court.

If husband and wife agreed to suppress pertinent and material evidence, or to take the conduct of the cause from the proper tribunal, or deceive the court and defraud the public, in the course of a divorce suit, this would be a species of collusion positively disadvantageous to marriage, and hence must not prevail,²³ although collusion does not appear by suppression of unimportant evidence.²⁴ Hence the promise of a defendant in a divorce suit already commenced, or about to be instituted, to make no defence, is void as against public policy; and accordingly the promise of a spouse to pay money upon such a consideration is held unenforceable; as is also, between the original parties and those not innocent and for value, a promissory note upon such consideration and no other.²⁵ The same may be said of agreements or notes given in respect to alimony, for the similar purpose of facilitating a divorce and rendering the terms against the guilty party lighter than they ought to be.²⁶ All collusive agreements between husband and wife to procure a divorce, when no real ground exists, are a fraud upon the court.²⁷

§ 1710. Agreeing to Divorce.

A divorce cannot be granted on consent of parties, but good cause must be shown,²⁸ and an agreement between the parties for a separation and divorce is collusive and prevents the granting of a divorce.²⁹

An agreement as to alimony, however,³⁰ or to facilitate the proceedings, is not collusion.³¹ § 1711. Agreements as to Division of Property.

A mere agreement as to division of property in case of divorce is not evidence of connivance.³² § 1712. Encouraging Spouse in Adultery.

Connivance being a charge to which any spouse too readily forgiving a matrimonial wrong becomes exposed, a check is thus imposed by law upon too easy condonation. Condonation may be guiltless, but connivance imports guilt. Yet the difference of presumption from circumstances already noticed between husband and wife under the preceding head extends necessarily to the present. Thus, it was held, where a wife sued for divorce on the ground of her husband's adultery and desertion with a paramour, that it was no defence for the husband to set up that the wife knew of his criminal acts at the time, continued living with him while he was committing them, and by her own conduct not amounting to an assent gave opportunity for the criminal intimacy to ripen.³³

Yet, as to a husband, another State court held almost contemporaneously that where a man discovers his wife in the act of adultery with another, and does not interrupt nor disclose his discovery to either of them, he may be held to have connived at the guilt, and hence may forfeit his right to a divorce.³⁴

To dwell upon the case of the stronger spouse, which is the usual one. If a husband spreads snares for his wife, exposes her purposely to licentious temptation, and surrounds her intentionally with seducers and profligates for her companions, he may well be presumed to be either shamefully indifferent to her virtue, and probably for his own pecuniary gain, or else deliberately planning to get rid of her. All such conduct, though less conclusive of evil intent in a particular instance than offering one's own premises to the paramour, or permitting carnal intercourse to go on uninterrupted, bears upon the main issue, and justifies the strongest presumption against him where all other circumstances correspond.³⁵ Thus, where the husband, with ample knowledge of the facts of the wife's indiscretions, for business reasons permits her to continue in peril, this will bar him from a divorce,³⁶ and so where a husband deserts a wife and hires witnesses to catch her in some act of adultery, and expresses satisfaction when she is discovered and remains on terms of friendship with the paramour.³⁷

§ 1713. Obtaining Others to Lure Spouse into Adultery.

It is connivance where the adultery is induced by the plaintiff's friends acting on his behalf and with his knowledge,³⁸ as where the adultery charged is committed with spies hired by the plaintiff, who induce the adultery.³⁹

But the mere fact that the defendant went with the plaintiff's detective to commit adultery does not show connivance where he was not employed to induce the adultery and did not do so.⁴⁰ § 1714. Committing Adultery for Purpose of Creating Evidence.

It is collusion where the defendant commits the offence with the knowledge of the plaintiff's agent and for the purpose of creating evidence.⁴¹ § 1715. Cruelty Inducing Adultery by Spouse.

Mere coolness on his part, or conjugal neglect, or even the cruel abuse of his wife, are circumstances less material, as establishing connivance, nor are they generally admissible; and yet, in connection with more positive testimony of connivance, they might perhaps be put in proof.⁴² § 1716. Passive Acquiescence.

It is not connivance for the husband to fail to interfere at once with his wife's apparent indiscretions in the absence of evidence that he desired her to go wrong or aided her in doing so,⁴³ as he has a right to wait to know the truth before acting,⁴⁴ and mere passive permission in misconduct to test fidelity is not connivance.⁴⁵

The mere fact that the defendant desires that the divorce be granted and makes no defence is not collusion.⁴⁶

§ 1717. Obtaining Evidence.

Mere acts of watching the movements of a suspected spouse is not connivance,⁴⁷ as tolerance of easy virtue in a matrimonial companion, indifference and delay over discovered guilt, must be quite different from confirming the suspicion of habitual adultery by waiting and watching for legal proof.⁴⁸

§ 1718. Catching Spouse by Trap.

The fact that one laid a trap for the spouse and caught him in the adultery is not connivance.⁴⁹ § 1719. Connivance at One Act as Bar to Divorce for Subsequent Acts.

There is a doctrine, which divorce courts admit to some extent, whereby the husband who positively connives at one act of adultery on his wife's part, so as to aid in debauching her, becomes debarred from setting up her subsequent adultery against her.⁵⁰

Intention is the point upon which all the light should be directed, and repeated condonation alone may compromise a husband so as to debar him from obtaining a divorce, especially if misconduct with the same paramour be the repeated offence at issue,⁵¹ but connivance at an act of adultery will not usually bar a divorce for a subsequent act.⁵²

§ 1720. Insincerity or Collusion as a Defence.

Insincerity is a defence which is frequently found asserted in connection with lapse of time, as where a fictitious suit was brought to give annoyance, or to raise some abstract point of law. A divorce court, scrutinizing the merits of each case, lest the public suffer some detriment, will throw such cases out of court.⁵³ Moreover, the rule of good faith pledging the parties to contend in earnest, neither of them asserting or admitting false allegations of matrimonial unfaithfulness, divorce by collusion is discounted.

Such objections to a divorce suit as these, or at all events the latter, are perhaps to be regarded as raised by the public, rather than by a party defendant, who, however, has necessarily the right and the duty of claiming that the charges in the libel are without foundation in point of fact.⁵⁴

§ 1721. In General.

It is a general principle applicable to all divorce proceedings, that the spouse petitioning for relief must have been both clear of blame and consistent in availing himself or herself of the other's matrimonial delinquency. By "clear of blame," we may mean (1) without substantial fault in causing the offence complained of, and, furthermore, (2) free from other misconduct equally reprehensible under the divorce laws. For if both parties have the same right to divorce, the rule is that neither has, since only an innocent spouse may properly ask the court to interpose. If the guilty offender has been forgiven, and upon a condition unbroken, then even the innocent spouse may be precluded from bringing a bill for divorce. Hence, various defences which may be employed against the petitioning spouse, apart from a general denial of the alleged misconduct upon which the petitioner relies. And so flexible is modern divorce procedure found under our codes, that, besides written answers, cross-bills are frequently allowed in aid of the defendant's case, and for the purpose of affirmative relief.

As to recrimination, it is the well-known maxim of equity, whose process, like that before monarchs or legislatures, is invoked by petition or libel, and whose Roman fundamental principles apply to causes in chancery, admiralty, or matrimonial courts alike, that he who comes into court must come with clean hands. And in common-law suits founded in tort, one perceives that a similar exemption from personal fault or negligence must also appear from the evidence in order to enable the plaintiff to recover. As to divorce, such maxims have a very broad application. So that, following the Mosaic and canon law, our courts of matrimonial jurisdiction, plainly disinclined as they always were to rupturing the marriage tie, have consistently held that the spouse who has violated his or her own marriage vows is in no position to complain that the other has done the same.⁵⁵

The courts will not as a general rule interfere and grant a divorce where the husband and wife have committed reciprocal outrages,⁵⁶ but where the quarrels between the parties are caused by the fault of one, the other may have a divorce.⁵⁷

One who had himself broken the marriage contract cannot obtain a divorce,⁵⁸ and where the libellant's own evidence shows him to have been guilty of misconduct amounting to cause for divorce, the divorce will be refused although the cause relied on is proved,⁵⁹ but the rule is in practice often relaxed and the comparative rectitude of the parties considered.⁶⁰

Under a statute giving the court discretion to grant a divorce where the parties have lived apart for many years, recrimination is not necessarily a defence to a petition for divorce,⁶¹ but even under such a statute a divorce will not be granted to the party who was wholly to blame for the estrangement.⁶²

§ 1722. Pleading and Proof of Recrimination.

The acts relied on in recrimination should be pleaded and proved as if made a basis for divorce,⁶³ and the mere suspicious conduct of the plaintiff is not a defence to a libel brought on account of the denial of sexual intercourse.⁶⁴

§ 1723. Burden of Proof.

There is some conflict as to the burden of proving recrimination. It is usually held that the burden is on the plaintiff not only to show the injury but also his own innocence.⁶⁵

It has, however, been stated that extreme cruelty, when offered as an excuse for desertion, is an affirmative defence, and the burden of proving it is on the defendant. The difficulty seems to be caused by the confusion between the burden of going forward with the evidence, which may shift from time to time in the trial, and the burden of proving one's whole case, which throughout rests on the plaintiff.⁶⁶ § 1724. Character of Acts Set Up in Recrimination.

Recrimination as a defence is available only where the defendant's acts relied on were induced by or in retaliation of the plaintiff's conduct and were of the same general character and such as are reasonably calculated to provoke the defendant's misconduct,⁶⁷ but the acts relied on as recrimination must be such as are sufficient ground for divorce.⁶⁸ Some of our local statutes are so construed that divorce is denied whenever both parties are guilty of any of the enumerated offences punishable by divorce from bonds of matrimony.⁶⁹ And to such a principle our American States seem to tend; Massachusetts, for instance, permitting, if not cruelty, at least desertion, to be alleged in recrimination for adultery, though such desertion must have extended over the full statutory period.⁷⁰ This tendency seems most fairly in accordance with a correct apprehension of the recrimination doctrine.

No less evidence is requisite to establish a recriminatory charge made in an answer than would be needful to establish a like charge by cross-bill, or in an original libel for divorce.⁷¹

The defence of recrimination may be made in this country according to the great weight of authority when the libellant has been guilty of any one of the statutory causes of divorce, on the theory that the libellant must himself be guiltless. So cruelty or desertion is a defense to an action for the subsequent adultery of the other party in those States where all three acts are equally causes for divorce,⁷² while in States where cruelty or desertion are only grounds for separation they are not defences to an action for divorce.⁷³ It has been said that no divorce can be had for adultery of the wife where she has been previously deserted by her husband, as this previous desertion might compel her to form a new connection for support,⁷⁴ but that this rule no longer holds good where by statute the husband may be compelled to provide her adequate support,⁷⁵ and that in that case the husband can obtain his divorce as his desertion of her gives her no license to commit adultery. So a wife guilty of adultery cannot obtain a divorce on any ground,⁷⁶ while a wife guilty of adultery may maintain an action for separation.⁷⁷

Where no adultery is claimed, evidence that the libellant had taken one of his female employees to a restaurant and had driven her in his automobile from her home to his office is not misconduct which will bar him from obtaining a divorce.⁷⁸

The defence of recrimination cannot always be made against one who, while married, has sexual intercourse with a woman not his wife, if it was the result of an honest mistake of fact which led him to believe his first marriage ended and to marry a second time and cohabit with another woman in the full belief that she was his lawful wife, provided the circumstances were such that he was justified in his belief that the first marriage had ended and that he had not been negligent or lax in endeavoring to ascertain the actual facts before he entered into the second marriage. But where the wife is put in jail and the husband, without inquiry as to his rights, marries again in the belief that the imprisonment of his wife left him free to marry again, this is not a reasonable mistake, and it is furthermore a mistake of law and not of fact, and a mistake of law cannot excuse one charged with adultery. Therefore the man cannot be given a divorce against his first wife.⁷⁹

be denied,⁸⁴ but adultery is a good defence to a charge of cruelty,⁸⁵ and is regarded as a good defence for a husband to allege in recrimination against his wife's libel for cruelty, especially if her adultery occurred first;⁸⁶ and desertion is a good defence to a charge of cruelty.⁸⁷

guilty of adultery,⁹⁰ although it appears that the cause of the divorce was complete before the adultery, and although it is claimed that the wife's desertion is an inciting cause of the adultery.⁹¹ This is the better American rule, although there are cases holding that adultery is no bar to a divorce for desertion occurring before the adultery.⁹² The true rule is that the plaintiff must come into the divorce court with clean hands. Cruelty is also a good defence to a charge of desertion.⁹³

Conduct to bar relief in an action for divorce for desertion need not be such as would give the defendant cause for a divorce, as inequitable conduct on the part of the plaintiff, though it does not amount to cause for a divorce, suffices to defeat his application for relief.⁹⁴ But the husband is entitled to a divorce for desertion where the wife leaves him and refuses to return unless she can occupy a separate room, and she does not show justification by proving that he insisted on paying the household bills himself and would not allow her money she wanted for the support of herself and children. While the support of the husband was meagre, the mere fact of failure to provide sufficient support for a wife does not constitute desertion by the husband under the New Jersey statute.⁹⁵ in bar; and this constitutes recrimination. The line, however, is not drawn with exactness, except where the offence in recrimination balances or overbalances the offence originally complained of. Thus, where both plaintiff and defendant were guilty of adultery, no matter which offence took place first, or whether adultery was committed under more heinous circumstances or more frequently by one spouse than the other, the rule is well established that either libellant's suit is barred on that showing.⁹⁶

In general, where the statutory offences alleged in the libel and on recrimination are visited by the same total or the same partial decree, recrimination may be allowed to operate as a bar. But upon such points, and as to the degree of reprobation which policy affixes to certain marital breaches, codes differ, and so likewise must decisions. Leniency to a wife's adultery, however, is thought to be of doubtful expediency in codes of good morals. Even in cases where the wife has wilfully denied, on her part, sexual intercourse to her husband, and deliberately thwarted his natural gratification or desire for offspring, courts have declined to admit such unkindness by way of recrimination for the husband's own adultery, or even his desertion,⁹⁷ and this all the more, perhaps, inasmuch as adultery in a woman is held to be the cardinal sin.

But whether cruelty can be set up as recrimination against a libel for adultery is more doubtful, and in the English ecclesiastical courts prior to the Divorce Statute the rule appears to have become established that it could not of itself.⁹⁸ It is also the general rule in this country ⁹⁹ that an action of adultery will not be defeated by a charge of cruelty. So a man may maintain a divorce for his wife's adultery although he had previously maliciously turned her out of doors. There is no reason why a woman who has been abandoned by her husband shall be privileged to commit adultery any more than if she were a widow or a single woman. There are some old cases which sustain the contrary view on the ground that the wife having no property might be forced and probably would be to form a new connection in order to obtain a support, but now, under modern statutes, she can obtain a separate support, and her property is preserved to her although married, so that the reason for the ancient rule no longer holds.¹

Desertion not continued for a sufficient length of time to constitute a ground for divorce prior to the act of adultery will not be a defence to an action of divorce for adultery,² the offences not being of the same gravity.³

may not be a defence to continuing adultery by the wife, as the latter offence is more urgent.⁴ And where parties separate by mutual consent and live apart by agreement, this living apart is not a defence by one of the parties to a petition for divorce for adultery.⁵

§ 1729. Whether a Condoned Offence Can Be Set Up in Recrimination.

This is found a difficult issue to decide in practice, courts having differed in their views according to the circumstances presented, and local statutes now controlling the subject to some extent.⁶ On principle, however, the party forgiven should stand as an innocent party in court if constant to the condition of forgiveness, so that the condoning party could no more use the guilt for recrimination than upon an original suit for divorce. Any other view, as Mr. Bishop has well suggested, would give to a condoning spouse the license of profligacy for the future, and some cases therefore hold that condonation by one of adultery does not give that spouse any license to offend in the same way,⁷ and where the adultery has been condoned it cannot be set up in defence.⁸ So impotence waived by long cohabitation cannot be set up as a defence.⁹

There is some authority that recrimination based on adultery is

Where the record shows personal service on the defendant the decree is not void, but may be voidable,¹⁷ but a decree of divorce based on a void marriage is void.¹⁸

Where an error in naming the parties is committed the court must be satisfied that it is purely clerical, and that the proper party was served.¹⁹ § 1731. Decree Must Be Based on Hearing and Finding, and Not on Agreement or Default.

The interest of the public in divorce²⁰ results in some principles peculiar to this action. The public is interested that the marriage state be preserved as sacred and that no dissolution of a valid marriage take place except on cogent reasons, and therefore proof of the grounds for divorce can never be dispensed with.²¹ The decree must be based on some finding,²² and cannot be allowed merely on judicial permission, where the usual principle prevails, inasmuch as the court retains control and exercises full supervision of the proceedings from beginning to end—judgment,³¹ if the plaintiff has maintained his or her cause, will be entered in that plaintiff's favor. Under some statutes the court may in an application for absolute divorce grant a divorce from bed and board,³⁷ or a decree for absolute divorce may be rendered after a decree for separation,³⁸ but the court has no jurisdiction to settle the claims of the wife against the husband for her separate property in a petition for divorce.³⁹

It is not an essential part of a decree in divorce that it disposes of the custody of the children.⁴⁰ § 1734. Limited Divorce.

A decree for limited divorce or separation usually may be granted where the facts require even though absolute divorce is refused,⁴¹ but only where such relief is asked for,⁴² and not where both parties are guilty and neither is entitled to a divorce.⁴³ § 1735. Absolute Divorce.

The court may in a proper case grant an absolute divorce on proper pleadings and evidence,⁴⁴ even although only a limited divorce is asked for in the petition,⁴⁵ but not based on a foreign judgment of separation.⁴⁶

§ 1736. Delay Before Final Decree.

The legislature may require a delay after a finding for a divorce before the entry of a final decree,⁴⁷ but a judgment for divorce is not void merely because the case was prematurely submitted for final judgment.⁴⁸

§ 1737. Reconciliation Before Final Decree.

Where a reconciliation takes place after an interlocutory decree, and before the time fixed by statute for entry of a final decree, the court can then enter no final decree. The very purpose of a delay in entry of a final decree is to give an opportunity for reconciliation.⁴⁹

§ 1738. Decree Nisi.

Some check being proper upon decrees so momentous as those of divorce, we find in the English system, and in certain States, the principle of decrees nisi, which give delay for remedying error or affording to the parties a final opportunity for reconciliation. A divorce nisi does not put an end to the marriage relation, but is in the nature of a divorce from bed and board.⁵⁰

A decree nisi is an interlocutory decree in divorce which may become final unless good cause is shown to the contrary within a certain specified time,⁵¹ but a defendant cannot delay making his defence until the decree nisi is entered and then present it.⁵² A decree nisi alone does not affect the status of the parties,⁵³ and has no effect to avoid an order for support.⁵⁴

A decree which fails to state that it is not operative for six months is still good as a decree nisi, as the provisions of the statute are read into it.⁵⁵

§ 1739. Right of Defendant to Insist on Final Decree for Plaintiff.

A defendant cannot insist that the plaintiff should have final judgment entered after a decree nisi, but the defendant may insist that the plaintiff either take out final judgment or have his action vacated.⁵⁶ entry of a final decree in proceedings for divorce a vinculo will terminate the jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter of the action, and over the parties in respect to all matters involved in it.⁵⁸ § 1741. Setting Aside Decree.

Divorce proceedings are flexible, to a large decree interlocutory, and further subject in higher courts to appeal, review, and orders for new trial or to vacate. Since, however, the decree which is finally entered for absolute divorce cannot be set aside without restoring marital relations to the same condition as before, to the distress, perhaps, of parties remarried and of their offspring,⁵⁹ such a decree ought not to be readily vacated, upon request, long after it has been entered, nor ever except for pressing cause, as in fraud, imposition, or an utter want of jurisdiction.⁶⁰

The decree will be set aside only on offer of a proper defence,⁶¹ and not because of irregularities where there was a trial and the defendant took part in the proceedings,⁶² and not where the defendant acted on erroneous advice, as this is a mistake of law.⁶³

The decree will be set aside only where it appears that the condition of the parties has not changed since the entry of the judgment,⁶⁴ and the court will hesitate to set aside a decree for divorce after the death or remarriage of one of the parties.⁶⁵ An interlocutory decree will not be set aside before the expiration of the time for entry of final decree.⁶⁶

In some States a decree for divorce, like other decrees, does not become final until the end of the term when the parties are entitled to judgment if the litigation is at an end, or until a special order is made for judgment on a specified date during term time. Under this practice, after a decree has been entered, but before the end of the term, the court may open the decree on a motion for rehearing.⁶⁷

Where proceedings for appeal are available they must be used,⁶⁸ and a decree cannot be vacated after expiration of the time set by statute for making application.⁶⁹ The plaintiff is estopped to complain of an irregularity in the decree in his favor.⁷⁰

A judgment will be set aside on account of newly discovered evidence only where it appears that the evidence could not have been discovered before by due diligence.⁷¹

§ 1742. Setting Aside Decree Entered Without Jurisdiction or on Default.

The court of the State which renders a decree of divorce, having no jurisdiction of the subject-matter or of the parties, may, of its own accord, annul and set aside that decree in a proper proceeding, begun in due season by the complaining party; and this, notwithstanding the party procuring the divorce has remarried and become a parent.⁷² vicious practice prevalent, not many years ago, in various parts of this country, of procuring surreptitious decrees of divorce for extra-territorial purposes. § 1743. Setting Aside Decree for Fraud.¹

A decree may be set aside where a fraud has been committed.⁷⁷ The court may open a divorce decree and ascertain if it was procured by perjured testimony without retrying the whole case.⁷⁸

Where a proceeding is brought to annul and make void a divorce decree the petitioner need not allege that she has a meritorious defence or that she submits herself to the jurisdiction of the court for new proceedings, where the original divorce was obtained by fraud. Such a rule would permit a party to take advantage of his own wrong, since he could compel a party to submit to the jurisdiction of the court when jurisdiction could be obtained in no other way.

Where a judgment is obtained by constructive service and then proceedings are taken to open up the judgment for the purpose of making a defence to the original action, the defendant must then submit to the jurisdiction of the court and must set up a good defence in the form of an affidavit or answer.⁷⁹ And fraud in procuring such divorce may consist in taking up a fictitious residence for the purpose of giving jurisdiction, concealing the commencement of the suit from the defendant, and falsifying testimony.⁸⁰

The court has the power to vacate a decree of divorce obtained by fraud on application seasonably made. Such a case is disclosed where the husband pretends that he will commit suicide if the wife does not agree to the divorce, and he thus persuades her to accept a lawyer he obtains for her and absents herself from the court when the case is called. This is in effect a divorce by default, although an appearance and answer were filed.⁸¹

Where the wife claims that a decree of divorce against her in another State where the parties formerly lived was obtained by fraud, she may testify concerning the fraud in a proceeding to secure possession of her minor child. Ordinarily it is not permissible for a party to attack a judgment for fraud in a collateral proceeding, as the party has his proper remedy by action to annul the judgment. But marriage being a status, and both parties being now residents of the State where the proceedings for custody are brought, the courts of the other State have no jurisdiction to fix the status of the child by amendment of the divorce decree, and therefore this will be allowed in the State where the parties now live.⁸²

§ 1744. Setting Aside Decree; Collusion.

One who has obtained a decree of divorce cannot by direct petition have it vacated on the ground that it was obtained by a collusive arrangement, especially where there is no allegation that the attorneys in the case or the court failed to do their duty.⁸³ And as a general rule courts of equity will not interfere to relieve a party to an action from a judgment which has been procured through a collusive agreement between the parties to the action, to the effect that either of said parties shall commence the action and obtain by the connivance or consent of the other a judgment to which he would not otherwise be entitled. Hence equity will not set aside a judgment obtained in a divorce case where the plaintiff agreed to consent to the divorce and not contest the same, although the defendant did not carry out his part of the bargain by making certain provisions regarding the custody of the two children. Courts of equity will not interfere with judgments in divorce proceedings obtained solely through the collusive connivance of the parties to the proceeding.⁸⁴

§ 1745. Setting Aside Decree; Laches.

A decree will not be vacated where the defendant was negligent in protecting herself after hearing of the pendency of the proceedings,⁸⁵ and not after knowledge and acquiescence by the defendant for a long period.⁸⁶

When a divorce is obtained by fraud relief must be asked within a reasonable time after knowledge of the fraud or of facts from which a prudent person would proceed to ascertain the true condition of affairs. So where the wife, claiming that a divorce against her was obtained by fraud, waits fourteen years after knowledge of the divorce, and then only acts after the death of the husband, the court will decline to act. Where the court has jurisdiction and personal service is had the decree cannot be treated as a nullity, but it is at most voidable. The fact that the husband is now dead and cannot defend himself against the charges made is another reason for taking no action.⁸⁷

§ 1746. Costs in General.⁸⁸

A decree awarding a divorce to the plaintiff is sufficient to sustain the part of the decree awarding costs,⁸⁹ and the wife will nearly always be allowed costs if she prevails in a divorce suit,⁹⁰ and costs may be allowed against the co-respondent who fails in his defence.⁹¹

The court usually has a large discretion as to costs in divorce cases,⁹² and costs not being a matter of right on dismissal of a petition by the wife, both parties may be left to bear their own costs,⁹³ while the costs may be taxed against the husband even though he is successful where the wife is without means.⁹⁴

Costs cannot be awarded against a defendant who is not served and does not appear.⁹⁵ § 1748. Costs on Appeal.

Where the wife appeals in good faith she may be allowed the costs of her appeal though unsuccessful,² and costs on appeal may be awarded against the husband even though he is successful in appealing.³

In Kentucky, however, it is held that the statute allowing costs to the wife does not apply to her costs on appeal from a decree of divorce against her on the ground that she is no longer a wife.⁴

NATURE OF ALIMONY.

SECTION 1749. Alimony Defined; Temporary and Permanent.

1750. Nature of Alimony.

1751. Nature of Proceedings for Alimony.

1753. Lien for.

1754. Whether Subject to Attachment or Execution.

1756. Alimony Not Barred by Bankruptcy.

§ 1749. Alimony Defined; Temporary and Permanent.

Alimony may be defined as the allowance which a husband, by order of the matrimonial court having due jurisdiction, must pay to his wife living separate from him for her maintenance. Alimony is of two kinds: alimony temporary or pendente lite, whose object being to provide for the needs of a wife during the pendency of a matrimonial suit, its allowance is granted quite readily, upon petition, whether the husband were innocent or guilty, so long as the party seeking it is really his wife; and at the termination of the suit permanent alimony, which is now awarded, at judicial discretion, under statutes enlarging the old law,⁷ on the theory that the divorced wife should have a regular maintenance from her husband's estate according to her own deserts, his means, and the wrong her late husband has done her. If, however, he has done her no wrong, but she herself is the offender, the wife has no right to permanent alimony at all,⁸ for the husband's grievance is enough for him to bear without so burdensome an imposition upon his property apart from his own consent.

7. Agreeably to the old English ecclesiastical practice of decreeing only divorce from bed and board, no alimony could be awarded upon divorce from bond of matrimony more than upon sentence of nullity.

8. Palmer v. Palmer, 1 Paige, 276; 3 Bl. Com. 94; sections post. In some States even a guilty wife may frequently, under the divorce code, procure permanent alimony. Deenis v. Deenis, 79 Ill. 74; Dailey v. Dailey, Wright, 514. But as matter of justice, this ought to be regulated by the husband's own sense of justice or pity.

§ 1750. Nature of Alimony.

Alimony is a doctrine founded in the common-law obligation of the husband to support his wife, but is affected in modern times by equity and statutory changes with regard to coverture disabilities.⁹

Alimony is not founded on contract, but arises out of the relation of marriage and the husband's duty of support,¹⁰ and it is therefore not improper in an argument on an award for alimony for counsel to refer to the duty of the husband to support the wife.¹¹ Alimony cannot be allowed where there is no valid marriage,¹² and the earnings or other personal estate of the husband are subject to its payment.¹³

§ 1751. Nature of Proceedings for Alimony.

Alimony is commonly incidental to the divorce suit and a separate proceeding will not lie,¹⁴ but the power of the court to award it is in no way dependent on the divorce decree itself,¹⁵ but in some States an independent action for alimony may be sustained.¹⁶

The court may in some States award alimony or a settlement out of the defendant's property in divorce in its general chancery powers.¹⁷ § 1752. Effect of Alimony Making Wife a Dependent.

Where the wife is granted alimony in a fixed sum which is decreed shall be a lien on his property she is a "dependent" of his within the terms of the insurance statutes providing that only "dependents" shall be allowed to share in the benefits of policies.¹⁸

§ 1753. Lien for.

Under a statute giving a lien for alimony the lien dates from the first decree awarding temporary alimony, and includes not only alimony due, but future alimony to become due, and is a lien on all the real estate of the husband.¹⁹

§ 1754. Whether Subject to Attachment or Execution.

Alimony is an allowance for support, which is made upon considerations of equity and public policy. It is not property of the wife recoverable as debt, damages or penalty. It is based upon the obligation, growing out of the marriage relation, that the husband must support his wife—an obligation which continues even after a legal separation without her fault. Being thus founded upon public policy, and created in equity, it cannot be diverted from the purpose of support without public injury; and therefore the courts which create the fund should see that it is not subjected to the rapacity of pre-existing creditors, who necessarily became such on the faith and credit of other funds. Such creditors have no claim on the support provided by the husband during the existence of the marriage relation.²⁰

In a recent case the court remarks that it seems to be conceded that alimony cannot be applied to pre-existing debts except in cases where the alimony has come into the wife's possession, but the court goes on to remark that "at no time and under no circumstances can alimony be lawfully subjected to the payment of a pre-existing debt." In that case the alimony had been paid to the wife's attorney, and it is held that he cannot be ordered to pay it over to a pre-existing creditor.²¹

Alimony due a judgment debtor is not subject to execution, especially where partly for the benefit of the child.²²

§ 1755. Homestead Not Subject to Alimony.

There are many cases showing the general tendency of the courts to regard alimony as not subject to the exemption statutes²³ with the exception that homestead exemption is usually regarded as sacred even as against a claim for alimony.²⁴

The remarriage of the husband against whom a divorce has been granted will not affect the situation, as he cannot thus claim the rights of a "head of a family."²⁵ The court in a recent case remarks: "If the defendant can create a condition with which to successfully defend himself against the decree of the court, then it may well be doubted whether the decree is of any use. The law ought not to permit him to construct a shield that will protect him in his marital and domestic recklessness. By getting married again he ought not to be permitted to relieve himself from the burden of supporting the child that he caused to come into the world."

§ 1756. Alimony Not Barred by Bankruptcy.

Alimony due or to become due is expressly excepted from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy by the amendment of 1903, and a foreign judgment on a decree for alimony does not so merge the alimony claim that it is barred by the discharge. The court remarks on the absurd result that would follow if it were held that the first judgment were not barred, while the second was, and that the court has a right to look behind the record and ascertain the real cause of action.²⁶ awarded alimony without divorce on his petition for divorce on a prayer in her answer asking relief.³¹

Courts of equity may have original jurisdiction to award alimony independently of a bill for divorce even though the wife does not prove facts sufficient to warrant a divorce. Such a case exists where the husband insists that the wife live with his family, who treat her without consideration and in such a way as to humiliate her and make it impossible for her to remain with them.³²

§ 1759. Jurisdiction Where Plaintiff Is Not a Resident.

Where alimony is an independent action, the fact that the plaintiff has not been a resident of the State the period required for a divorce will not bar the court from awarding her alimony,³³ and alimony may be ordered even though the husband brings suit in a court having no jurisdiction.³⁴

A separate suit for alimony may be brought wherever the defendant may be found or has property to be attached, even though the plaintiff is a non-resident.³⁵ § 1760. Jurisdiction Over Property Rights Within Jurisdiction.

And jurisdiction of the parties carries with it authority to adjust property rights of the parties to property within the jurisdiction,³⁶ except that the court may make orders subjecting the land of the defendant to alimony if it is in the State, although the defendant is a non-resident not served with process.³⁷

Where, at the time suit for divorce against a non-resident defendant is first begun, a preliminary order is entered ordering the bank where the defendant keeps his account in the State not to pay out any of the deposit, and then later a decree for divorce is rendered on substituted service, the court may order the bank to pay the defendant's money in its possession to the plaintiff as alimony.

The Fourteenth Amendment did not "abridge the jurisdiction which a State possessed over property within its borders regardless of the residence or presence of the owner. That jurisdiction extends alike to tangible and to intangible property. Indebtedness due from a resident to a non-resident — of which bank deposits are an example — is property within the State."

It was claimed that alimony could not be collected by a proceeding quasi in rem, as no debt existed at the commencement of the action, but the obligation to pay alimony arises only as a result of the suit.

The court remarks, however, that the distinction is without legal significance, as the power of the State to proceed against the property of an absent defendant is the same whether the obligation sought to be enforced is an admitted indebtedness or a contested claim, and it is immaterial that the claim is at the commencement of the suit inchoate, to be perfected only by time or the action of the court. The only essentials to the exercise of the State's power are presence of the res within its borders, its seizure at the commencement of proceedings, and the opportunity of the owner to be heard. The injunction is an effective seizure for this purpose.³⁸

§ 1761. Jurisdiction Over Land Outside of Jurisdiction.

And the court may even order a conveyance of land outside the jurisdiction, such decree operating in personam and not being a conveyance in itself.³⁹ § 1762. Personal Service Necessary.

A petition for alimony is not a new or independent proceeding such that a new service is required, but is merely incidental to the original suit.⁴⁰ But a judgment for alimony is in personam, and hence even in courts which formerly held the doctrine that the marriage status could be fixed without personal service, alimony may be ordered only after personal service on the defendant,⁴¹ and after giving the defendant an opportunity to be heard,⁴² and jurisdiction of alimony cannot be conferred by consent of parties.⁴³

So an order to a bank to pay over money belonging to the husband is void without giving the bank an opportunity to be heard.⁴⁴

§ 1763. Authorized by Statute.

Alimony pendente lite, or temporary, is frequently found a matter of statute direction.⁴⁵ Independently of statute, it is allowable, on petition (though some of our American States certainly have held otherwise).

§ 1764. Jurisdiction in Equity.

At common law neither party had a separate right of action in equity to compel support. Modern decisions first accorded this right to support pendente lite, pending divorce proceedings, as an incident to the equitable divorce relief sought.⁴⁶

The next step in the same line was the recognition by the courts of equity of the right in the wife to, independently of divorce, maintain an action for alimony or support, and procure judgment from the husband, as to which the courts of this country are in conflict. The early common-law rule was followed on that question in many jurisdictions and the right denied, the courts conceding themselves powerless to afford relief until statute clothed them with express authority. But gradually the trend of authority turned in favor of the maintenance of such an action. Much confusion existed on account of the fact that the English equity courts had frequently refused jurisdiction, considering that such matters more properly lay with the ecclesiastical courts. The greater weight of authority, however, is now in favor of the right to maintain such an action as a matter of equitable jurisdiction.⁴⁷ In other States such right is granted by statute.⁴⁸ The basis of these cases is that the moral right to support being conceded, the court sitting in equity will enforce it.

This same reasoning applies to give the husband, where he has a right of support, the right in equity to a decree entitling him to support where he is destitute and the wife has funds.⁴⁹ So where the wife has property valued at $30,000, and the husband is destitute and a paralytic, the wife will be ordered to support him, independently of statute or of the pendency of divorce proceedings.⁵⁰

§ 1765. Incident to Divorce.

In some States alimony can be allowed only in an action for divorce,⁵¹ or where annulment of marriage is sought by husband or wife,⁵² and not to enable the wife to prosecute a suit to set aside a divorce,⁵³ or where there is no pending suit for divorce until there is a proceeding for permanent alimony.⁵⁴

The order must be made before a final decree in divorce,⁵⁵ but the fact that a motion for modification of a final decree is pending will render the suit still pending so that temporary alimony may be ordered.⁵⁶

An order for alimony cannot be made in an original proceeding for the purpose of prohibiting the trial judge from exceeding his powers.⁵⁷

even before the return day when the husband has appeared to question the jurisdiction.⁵⁹

Even though an order for alimony is made pendente lite at an ex parte hearing at which the court refuses to hear testimony on the part of the libellee, still this is not an abuse of discretion of which he can complain when the court advises him that he can file a motion to reduce the award and he fails to do so.⁶⁰

§ 1767. Allowance to Husband.

A statute allowing alimony to the wife is exclusive and will not justify its payment to the husband,⁶¹ although the husband may have such right in equity,⁶² and temporary maintenance is such, under some codes, that the court may direct either party to contribute to the support of the other.⁶³

§ 1768. Validity of Marriage.

Usually no order for temporary alimony can be made until a valid marriage is proved,⁶⁴ since only a wife has the right to claim it.⁶⁵

Alimony pendente lite may be allowed, however, on prima facie evidence of a marriage,⁶⁶ or of a de facto marriage,⁶⁷ and not in the absence of evidence of marriage.⁶⁸ But such alimony has been § 1769. Fault of Parties.

It seems to be the general rule that temporary alimony will be allowed only where the wife presents probable grounds for success in her suit as plaintiff,⁷⁰ and shows merit in her cause,⁷¹ or where the husband has condoned the wife's improprieties,⁷² and may be denied where the wife was at fault.⁷³ In case of doubt as to who was at fault the court may order alimony pendente lite,⁷⁴ or where the evidence is conflicting the court may refuse it.⁷⁵

Where the wife is the defendant she may be allowed alimony pendente lite where she denies the allegations of the bill,⁷⁶ or where she reconvenes praying for relief she is to that extent in the position of a plaintiff and entitled to ask for alimony pendente lite.⁷⁷

§ 1770. Needs of Wife.

The Married Women's Acts have changed the old rule under which temporary alimony was allowed as of course, and now it will be allowed only on proof of destitution of the wife or inability to maintain herself.⁸¹

Two elements are material in the award of alimony: the wife's needs and the husband's ability to pay. As to temporary alimony and suit-money, the rule is that no allowance shall be made where the wife has sufficient means of her own;⁸² by which is not meant, however, that the latter must consume the principal of her separate estate, since income is chiefly regarded.⁸³

Under some statutes temporary alimony is allowed only for the

§ 1774. Modification of Order.⁹⁶

The court has power to modify any decree of alimony made pendente lite while the cause is still pending before it from the nature of the situation.⁹⁷

§ 1775. Appeal from Order.

An order granting alimony pendente lite is not appealable, but an appeal does lie from an order adjudging the libellee in contempt for failing to obey the order for alimony pendente lite.⁹⁸

§ 1776. Power of Appellate Court or of Lower Court Pending an Appeal.

The weight of authority supports the view that appellate courts possess inherent power to allow alimony, suit-money and attorney's fees pending an appeal, and may make such allowance as the circumstances warrant. This power seems necessary by reason of the nature of the case for the protection of wives who might otherwise find it impossible to be represented before the appellate court.⁹⁹

Where the power to award counsel fees and temporary alimony is not expressly given to the appellate court, it may be implied as a necessary incident of appellate jurisdiction, as in aid of that jurisdiction the court has power to protect that jurisdiction and to make the decisions of the court thereunder effective. A grant of jurisdiction implies that there is included in it the power necessary to its effective exercise and to make all orders that will preserve the subject of the action and give effect to the final determination of the appeal.¹

After an appeal has been taken from a final decree of divorce § 1777. Allowance in General.

Upon the same principle that a wife should have her legal rights and remedies from the purse which the law commits to the husband, her counsel and solicitor's fees are also allowable by divorce codes and practice, to a reasonable extent, from her husband's means.³

In the absence of statute on the subject, the propriety of an allowance to the wife for counsel fees and expenses in a divorce suit depends on the general principles of law, according to which

such allowance depends on the good faith of the suit, the probability of success and the financial condition of the parties.⁴

It is commonly provided that the wife may be allowed sums to enable her to protect her rights before the court for counsel fees or expenses,⁵ whether she be plaintiff⁶ or defendant.⁷

§ 1778. Evidence of Valid Marriage.

As the right to fees depends on the existence of the relationship of husband and wife, they can only be allowed after evidence of a valid marriage,⁸ and not where the marriage was void on account of the wife's prior marriage.⁹

The matter of allowance of attorney's fees is in the discretion of the court,¹⁰ although it may be error to refuse to grant counsel fees in the absence of evidence of facts which would authorize the judge in the exercise of a sound discretion to refuse them,¹¹ and where the wife has ample means an allowance may be an abuse of discretion.¹²

the husband's charges will lay the basis for counsel fees,¹⁴ but not usually where it appears that the wife is guilty,¹⁵ or where after a trial it appears that the wife is not entitled to a divorce,¹⁶ where the husband merely defends and brings no counter charges.¹⁷

The right of a wife to an allowance to enable her to prosecute an appeal is in some States independent from the issues in the divorce suit, and is in no way dependent on the right to a divorce.¹⁸ Under this rule the husband may be taxed for the costs of the wife and attorney's fee even though he was successful, and the wife was not free from blame, if she has not estate sufficient to pay them,¹⁹ and the husband must pay unless the wife is in the wrong and is able to pay.²⁰

§ 1781. Financial Ability of Parties.

An allowance for counsel fees is commonly conditioned on the wife's financial inability to protect her rights without such allowance,²¹ and is allowed where it appears that the wife is in need of it,²² and where the husband has means.²³ § 1782. At What Stage of Proceedings Order May Be Made.

Statutes allowing the award of counsel fees pending the petition for divorce cover the period between the commencement of the action and the rendering of a final judgment.²⁴

The award of counsel fees is an interlocutory matter and cannot usually be made in the final decree,²⁵ except that it may be made in the final decree by stipulation.²⁶

Counsel fees cannot be ordered after final judgment of divorce,²⁷ but may be allowed on a petition for custody of children after finding.²⁸

Where the husband files a cross complaint the wife may be allowed suit-money in this cross complaint.²⁹ Where the suit is dismissed before an allowance is made the husband is not liable for the wife's attorney's fees.³⁰

A statute rendering the husband liable for his wife's attorney's fees does not apply to her appeal from a decree of divorce against her, she being no longer his wife.³¹ § 1783. Whether Court May Make More Than One Award.

One award may exhaust the power of the court,³² but it is also held that an order directing a husband to pay suit-money early in a case does not exhaust the power of the court on the subject, and it may make a further order later.³³ § 1784. Items and Amount; Services in What Proceedings Included.

An attorney may recover costs which he paid and expenses reasonably necessary in procuring information,³⁴ but not for traveling expenses of non-resident attorneys.³⁵ Before taxing the wife's attorney's fees against the husband he should be given an opportunity to show what is a fair fee.³⁶

Statutes authorizing counsel fees in divorce cases do not allow counsel fees in an independent action brought to modify a decree in a divorce suit on the ground of fraud,³⁷ but may include services in a proceeding to vacate a judgment in divorce,³⁸ and suit-money may be awarded to enable the wife to prosecute an appeal in a proper case.³⁹

§ 1785. To Wife and Not to Counsel.

Counsel fees are ordered to the wife as alimony and not to the counsel,⁴⁰ and the allowance should be to the wife and not to the attorney,⁴¹ although it may be made to the wife for the use of her attorney named.⁴²

§ 1786. Allowance to Husband.

A statute providing for suit-money to the wife is exclusive and prohibits the husband from such an allowance,⁴³ and a special statute allowing suit-money to the husband in certain cases will allow it only in such cases as specified.⁴⁴ § 1787. Against Husband or Co-Respondent.

Counsel fees may be ordered taxed against either the husband, if defeated, or the co-respondent, if the husband is successful.⁴⁵ § 1788. Whether Wife's Attorneys' Fees Are Necessaries.

Whether a wife can pledge her husband's credit for legal services depends, as in case of other necessaries, on whether the wife wilfully lived apart from the husband without his fault and thus forfeited her right to pledge his credit for necessaries, and otherwise the husband is liable for fees of her attorneys reasonably necessary for her protection,⁴⁶ but it has been held that the services of an attorney in conducting a divorce suit are not necessaries within the common-law meaning of the term for which the husband

The order for counsel fees fixes the limit of the husband's liability,⁴⁹ and a husband who has complied with an order of court as to alimony cannot be charged with attorney's fees in addition.⁵⁰

§ 1790. Wife's Liability.

A married woman may be liable to her attorney on her express promise to pay him,⁵¹ and the fact that the wife has been granted an allowance for attorney's fees does not prevent the attorney from recovering a fair fee from the wife.⁵²

The allowance from the court is simply a relief to that extent for the wife, and the attorney does not by obtaining it bar himself from a fair fee under his contract with the wife.⁵³ where differences arise which threaten a disruption, public welfare and the good of society demand a reconciliation if practical or possible; and for these reasons a contract which tends to prevent such a reconciliation is void. Therefore it is proper, even in cases where such a contract is made, for the court to allow counsel fees in the decree.⁵⁴

§ 1792. Separate Action for Attorney's Fees.

In some States the husband's liability for his wife's attorney's fees is ancillary to the divorce action and cannot be recovered separately,⁵⁵ while in others it is not ancillary and can be recovered separately.⁵⁶ for counsel fees they have no right by dismissing their counsel to avoid liability, but the order fixes the counsel's right to fees.⁵⁸

Furthermore, it is usually held that the courts have the right to allow counsel fees pendente lite even after the parties have become reconciled with each other. The courts take the view that it is just as much the duty of the courts to compel honesty and fair dealing on the part of a man who has had trouble with his wife as it is to promote a peaceful adjustment of his marital difficulties.⁵⁹ The statutory power given to allow counsel fees pendente lite means at any time before the entry of the final decree,⁶⁰ and the fact that since the services were rendered the parties have become reconciled is not a legal equivalent of a dismissal of the case, and does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to make an order for counsel fees.⁶¹

The opposite view is often taken that where the parties to a divorce suit have been reconciled and are living together, and the plaintiff directs her attorneys to dismiss the suit, it should be dismissed, and will not be held open for the purpose of awarding counsel fees to the plaintiff's attorneys. Public policy requires the settlement of divorce litigation as speedily as possible, and that the parties should not be forced to display the family skeleton and parade their forgiven grievances so as to aid the judge to determine what counsel fees should be awarded. Counsel in such case have ample remedy in suit in the usual way.⁶² So a divorce suit should not be continued after reconciliation between the par-

§ 1795. In General.

Where nullity is pronounced, or no marriage, or, upon a wife's petition for divorce, she is found in fault and the result of the whole litigation is to grant a divorce to her husband instead, she is not entitled to permanent alimony; for such alimony is not for guilty wives, nor for those who are not properly wives at all.⁶⁵ Permanent alimony varies according to the offence; the means and prospects of the husband; what he received through marriage from his wife; the wife's comparative means and separate property, and like circumstances. A gross sum is sometimes adjudged to a divorced woman as her permanent alimony, especially where vexa-tious delay is feared.⁶⁶ More often it is fixed at a certain defined proportion, usually from one-third to one-half of the increase and income of his property and means of support, and made payable by periodical sums.⁶⁷ But the rule is not rigid, and regards what is reasonable and just from all the circumstances of the case.⁶⁸

§ 1796. Defined.

Alimony has been defined as an allowance to the wife on account of her living apart from her husband without her fault, to take the place of the legal obligation of the husband to support her.⁶⁹

§ 1797. Dependent on Statute.

Alimony can be granted only as authorized by statute.⁷⁰

To give all the husband's property as alimony to the wife is unwarranted. Ross v. Ross, 78 Ill. 402. § 1798. Dependent on Valid Marriage.

Alimony is dependent on the existence of a valid marriage.⁷¹ So where alimony is awarded in a petition for maintenance, and the defence is that there is no marriage, an appeal stays the execution of the order for alimony, as any such payment would be an impairment pro tanto of the subject of the appeal, and also an invasion of the defendant's right to have his property preserved and not diminished during the contest in the court of appeal. The court, however, has jurisdiction to award alimony pendente lite.⁷²

§ 1799. Marriage Induced by Fraud.

It is no defence to alimony that the husband was induced to marry by the promise of the wife's father to convey to him certain property, which agreement he failed to keep.⁷³

§ 1800. Divorce Obtained by Fraud.

Alimony may be refused where the court is convinced at a subsequent hearing that the divorce was obtained by a perversion of the facts by the complainant.⁷⁴

§ 1801. Award to Husband.

In the absence of a statute authorizing it a husband is not entitled to alimony from his wife,⁷⁵ but under statute a husband may be awarded alimony even when unsuccessful in his action for divorce.⁷⁶ § 1802. Effect of Dismissal of Libel.

Alimony will not usually be allowed to a wife whose separation petition is denied on account of her fault,⁷⁷ or to a wife on being refused a divorce,⁷⁸ but she may be entitled to alimony although her petition is denied where she is not at fault.⁷⁹ A dismissal by the husband of his bill for divorce does not deprive the court of the power to render a judgment against him for alimony.⁸⁰

Where wife was entitled to a divorce, she was entitled to an allowance for alimony. Dunn v. Dunn, 150 Mich. 476, 14 Det. Leg. N. 767, 114 N. W. 385.

The general rule is that the income of the husband, whether derived or to and should be awarded where the wife has been cruelly treated,⁸³ and where divorce is granted to the wife the court may be under a duty to award alimony.⁸⁴ It may be awarded where the husband abandons his wife although the wife is not free from fault,⁸⁵ or may by statute be allowed on the sole ground of living apart for a certain number of years.⁸⁶

The failure of a wife to obey a decree that she should allow the husband certain rights with regard to the children does not excuse him from paying alimony.⁸⁷

It is the general rule that permanent alimony will not be granted unless the husband is guilty,⁸⁸ or to a wife whose conduct was the sole cause of the separation,⁸⁹ or where the wife is living apart from the husband without reasonable cause.⁹⁰

A wife having obtained a limited divorce from bed and board is still under the obligation of chastity, and alimony is conditional on the performance of that obligation.⁹¹

Where a libel in divorce by a husband charges both desertion and barbarous treatment, and a jury finds for the libellant on both charges, the court cannot make an order for permanent alimony to the wife under Act May 8, 1854 (P. L. 644), and Act June 25, 1895 (P. L. 308), providing that, where a wife by barbarous treatment renders the condition of the husband intolerable, the court may, in case of divorce on the application of the husband, grant alimony. *Parker v. Under Civ. Code 1895, § 2435, providing that in all suits for divorce a jury may give permanent alimony to the wife, though a husband may obtain a divorce from his wife on the ground of wilful desertion for more than three years before the filing of the suit, it is not an inflexible rule of law that the wife shall not be allowed alimony; but it does not follow that the divorced wife would be entitled to alimony as of course where her conduct has caused her husband to obtain a total divorce from her. *Davis v. may be ordered even though the husband has no property and cannot work, if it appears that he has conveyed his property with intent to avoid alimony.⁴ § 1807. Allowed Only in Divorce Decree.

Permanent alimony will be allowed in a decree for absolute divorce in a proper case,⁵ but usually alimony cannot be allowed on proceedings begun after the decree in divorce where the decree makes no provision for it.⁶

Where the question of alimony is raised by the pleadings the failure of the court to pass upon it is a judicial error, and hence the decree cannot be amended,⁷ as if the wife asked alimony in the original action, and none is awarded, the effect of it is the same as if the decree had expressly denied it, and it is an adjudication binding upon the parties.⁸ An absolute decree of divorce may not be amended by adding to it an award of alimony. At common law and under ecclesiastical procedure courts did entertain such an action, but this was because there was no such thing as an absolute divorce known to either law. The divorce was from bed and board and was little more than legalized separation, and the duty of the husband to support the wife continued after the divorce was granted, and these courts recognized the right to enforce this obligation by changing the original decree or order to meet new conditions. But the modern divorce decree is an adjudication binding upon the parties, and it cannot be modified by awarding alimony. The fact that the statute provides that subsequent changes may be made in the allowance for alimony does not give the court jurisdiction, as there is here nothing to modify. The wife relinquished her right to alimony when she failed to have it awarded in the original decree.⁹ Alimony may, however, be allowed after a decree nisi,¹⁰ or after a void decree,¹¹ or after decree where in the decree the question of alimony is reserved.¹² Where a decree which makes no provision for alimony is reopened for fraud of the petitioner in obtaining it, the court should not allow alimony in a new decree.¹³

By statute, however, in some States alimony may be awarded after decree for divorce although the petition and decree are silent on the subject,¹⁴ but even under a statute authorizing the court to modify its allowance of alimony the court may be powerless to order alimony later where none is provided in the original decree.¹⁵

§ 1808. Wife Not Bound Where She Has No Notice of Divorce.

Where a divorce is granted to the husband in a suit of which no service or notice on the wife was had, this does not affect her rights to alimony.¹⁶ § 1809. Separation by Consent.

The husband is not bound to support the wife where they mutually agree to live separate, and hence no alimony should be awarded in such case.¹⁷

§ 1810. Agreement of Parties.

Alimony is incidental to matrimonial procedure, and usually requires the court's intervention. And it is accordingly held that an agreement not thus sanctioned between husband and wife pending a suit, that the one shall pay a certain sum as alimony to the other, is purely voluntary and unenforceable by the wife.¹⁸ But arrangements through a trustee, pending a divorce suit, may be sustained as furnishing a fair equivalent for temporary alimony.¹⁹ Bona fide and fair settlements relative to permanent alimony, too, are permitted to stand against the opposition of third persons and the wife's solicitor himself.²⁰

Agreements for money payment, or notes to the use of the wife through a third party, in consideration of her condonation and a dismissal of her divorce suit, being favorable to marriage, have been upheld.²¹ All arrangements between spouses in the position of parties to a divorce suit are, however, to be investigated jealously; and their contract, if unequal, or tending to facilitate a final divorce between them, can hardly be deemed otherwise than contrary to public policy and good morals.²²

Thus an agreement is void as against public policy which undertakes that the wife will not attack a decree of divorce obtained against her by fraud in consideration that he pays her certain sums for support. The agreement requires the suppression of evidence of collusion and fraud practiced on a court of justice.²³

Although any agreement between the parties to a divorce to influence the decision of the court by concealment or misrepresentation is collusive and void, and every agreement made between the parties to a divorce action concerning property rights or alimony is carefully scrutinized by the court, still a fair agreement between the parties for a payment or division of property made without collusion as to the procuring of the divorce is not opposed to, but is in aid of the orderly and just determination by the court of the questions involved in the action. The obligation on the part of the husband to contribute from his property or earnings to the future support of his wife after a divorce is so well defined and understood that it is a proper subject of negotiation between the parties. So such an agreement made fairly after the court had announced that it was about to grant the wife a divorce will be sustained.²⁴

Alimony may be thus fixed by a fair agreement of parties,²⁵ and where the agreement becomes a part of the decree it becomes as binding as any other part of the decree,²⁶ but such an agreement will not affect the power of the court to make or enforce its own decree.²⁷

Such an agreement may remain valid although not embodied in the decree,²⁸ and a postnuptial contract of separation settling all property rights between the parties is a bar to alimony,²⁹ but not where the divorce suit was not in contemplation of the parties at the time the contract was signed, and the contract was made to settle differences as to property rights then outstanding between them.³⁰

CHAPTER XXXIV.

AMOUNT OF ALIMONY.

SECTION 1814. In General.

- 1815. Agreement of Parties.
- 1816. Award of Lump Sum or Periodical Payments.
- 1817. Award of Specific Property.
- 1818. Fault of Parties.
- 1819. Property of Parties.
- 1820. Husband's Debts.
- 1821. Effect of Conveyances in Fraud of Dower.
- 1822. Source of Property.
- 1823. Husband's Future Income.
- 1824. Wife's Future Expenses.
- 1825. Effect of Dower Rights.
- 1826. Fact That Wife Had Supported Herself During Marriage.
- 1827. Marriage of Convenience.

§ 1814. In General.

The amount of the alimony should depend on the circumstances of each case, including the age and health and social position of the parties, the financial condition of both and source of property, earning capacity and respective fault of the parties as appears by the divorce proceedings and the necessities of the children.³⁹

The needs and social standing of the wife may be considered.⁴⁰

The amount of alimony is in the discretion of the trial judge, whose award will not be disturbed unless a clear abuse of judgment is shown,⁴¹ but a statute conferring discretion on the court means reasonable discretion and does not give him unlimited powers.⁴²

§ 1815. Agreement of Parties.⁴³

Alimony may be and commonly is fixed in accordance with an agreement between the parties.⁴⁴ Such agreement will be upheld,

Where the complaint asks for a certain sum this is satisfied where monthly payments equal that sum.⁴⁹

Where a divorce is denied a wife because of condonation periodical payments should be awarded subject to modification on change of circumstances.⁵⁰

Where the wife is credulous and easily imposed upon she should be given a monthly allowance rather than a lump sum.⁵¹

§ 1817. Award of Specific Property.

Alimony can usually only be ordered in money,⁵² but in some cases specific property will be awarded to the wife.⁵³ Land is sometimes set off for permanent alimony, or a lien upon it decreed as security.⁵⁴

§ 1818. Fault of Parties.

Where the wife has been deserted the allowance should be liberal,⁵⁵ and may be small where the wife is somewhat at fault herself.⁵⁶

The husband is not relieved from his duty to his wife by the fact that he owes debts,⁶³ but his indebtedness must be considered.⁶⁴

§ 1821. Effect of Conveyances in Fraud of Dower.

The alimony will not be affected by the fact that the husband has made conveyances in fraud of the marital rights of the wife.⁶⁵

§ 1822. Source of Property.

The court may consider that the parties have been married only a short time and that the wife had contributed nothing to the family funds, and therefore make the award small,⁶⁶ but it may be larger where the wife's labor or money has contributed to the property.⁶⁷ So where the wife obtains a divorce through the fault

Income from gambling. The court, in awarding permanent alimony, will not speculate on a future income from a continuous and persistent career of vice and criminality and adopt as a basis for its decree a division of the anticipated illegal spoils acquired by gambling. § 1824. Wife's Future Expenses.

The wife's probable expenditure in litigation may be considered in awarding alimony.⁷⁰

§ 1825. Effect of Dower Rights.

While the main basis for fixing the amount of the alimony is always the equity of the cases and the necessities of the wife, still also compensation should be made to her for her losses growing out of the divorce, and the court should consider the value of the wife's dower which she has lost by divorce,⁷¹ and where a wife obtains a divorce for a husband's fault alimony will not be less than her interest in their property before divorce.⁷² Alimony may be made in lieu of dower and may be limited to the remarriage of the wife,⁷³ and may be a sum in cash fixed at about a third of the husband's estate,⁷⁴ and the allowance for permanent alimony may be set at about one-third of the husband's income, not including the amount necessary for the wife, and also figuring in the amount of the wife's income.⁷⁵

vation in the decree or express statutory authority the court has no power to alter its decree.³

Where the divorce is absolute, the alimony awarded is permanent, there are no minor children, there is no express reservation in the decree, and there is no statute conferring upon the court the authority to modify or alter its decrees in respect to alimony, the court has no authority to do so. The decree is like other decrees, final and conclusive, and the court has no power to alter it, but possesses only the right to enforce obedience to it in accordance with the great weight of authority.⁴

A statute permitting amendment does not apply to decrees entered prior to its passage,⁵ and authorizes revision only based on new facts, and does not allow the insertion in the decree of a provision as to lien which might have been made in the original decree.⁶

The court may have authority to modify alimony only on evidence of such fraud or mistake as would authorize it to modify any other decree.⁷

However, the court has power to modify orders for alimony entered in case of a divorce from bed and board, as this power is incident to the jurisdiction to regulate the rights of the parties growing out of the marital status, which status is unaffected by the decree for legalized separation.⁸

§ 1829. Award Based on Agreement.

The court cannot modify a decree entered by consent of all parties as to alimony,⁹ or based on contract,¹⁰ and an allowance based on agreement may not be regarded as "alimony" subject to change by the court,¹¹ but it has been held that a statute authorizing the court to modify alimony will apply to a decree based on a property settlement.¹²

Where alimony is settled by agreement between the parties the court cannot amend a judgment which does not provide for alimony so as to include it and then strike it out on remarriage of the wife.¹³

A decree for alimony may, however, be modified when based on a stipulation procured by fraud.¹⁴

§ 1830. Sums Already Due or Gross Sums.

Where, however, a gross sum is awarded as alimony the power of the court is at an end and the court has no power to modify it later,¹⁵ and the wife, as each instalment falls due, acquires a vested right to it, and cannot therefore be deprived of it, and an order annulling past instalments already due cannot be made nunc pro tunc,¹⁶ although the opposite view is held to the effect that the court may cancel accrued instalments on the ground that they are not a vested property right.¹⁷

§ 1831. Evidence of Change of Conditions.

Modification can only be ordered on proof of change of conditions, as the decree is final as to conditions existing at the time,¹⁸ as where illness of the husband has caused him large expense and the wife needs less than before,²⁵ or where the wife inherits property sufficient for her needs.²⁶

A decree decreeing insurance may be modified by providing that it shall be the property of the wife,²⁷ or, on the other hand, a decree of alimony may be changed or cut off altogether on evidence that the libellee has taken up an open life of shame. The courts will not permit vice to flaunt its banner unchallenged. The court may also change alimony into a permanent division of property between the parties.²⁸

§ 1832. Laches, Failure to Pay Accrued Alimony.

The right to obtain a modification may be lost by delay or laches.²⁹ Where the defendant has failed to obey the order of the court as to alimony the court may refuse to entertain an application for its reduction,³⁰ or modification may be ordered on condition of payment of accrued instalments.³¹ § 1833. Death of Parties.

The wife's right to alimony ceases on death of the husband,³² and as her right to support terminates with her husband's death the court has no jurisdiction to impose a charge for alimony on his estate after his death,³³ but a provision for the payment of a monthly sum for the support of a child may not cease on the death of the husband.³⁴

The arrears of alimony due a divorced wife at the time of her death may be collected by her executor or administrator, and the wife may also hold the husband's estate for alimony due and unpaid at the time of his death. Alimony is a judgment rendered after a verdict imposing a liability on the husband to pay a particular sum of money, and it does not abate until its purpose is accomplished any more than any other judgment for money.³⁵ § 1834. Remarriage.

The remarriage of a divorced wife cuts off her right to alimony from the date of her remarriage,³⁶ and alimony may be reduced to a nominal sum where the wife has remarried with a man able to support her, or retained only at a sum sufficient for support of the minor children.³⁷

The remarriage of one against whom an order to pay alimony has been made is not a ground for modifying the award of alimony. A divorced husband who voluntarily assumes the additional obligation of supporting another wife ought not to be heard to urge that as a reason why he should be relieved to any extent from such allowance,³⁸ especially where he marries the woman who has been the cause of the divorce.³⁹

It has been held, however, that where the husband has obtained a decree of divorce in another State and married again the rights of the second wife must be considered,⁴⁰ and alimony should not take a man's entire estate where he has married again and had children by a second wife. One-half or one-third of his property is the more proper rule.⁴¹

§ 1835. Contempt as a Remedy.

A judgment for alimony differs from an ordinary judgment in this, that an ordinary judgment at law does not order the defendant to pay anything, but simply adjudicates the amount owing and remits the plaintiff to his ordinary remedies by execution or otherwise, while an order for alimony, though partaking of the nature of a judgment, goes further, and is a direct command of the court to the defendant to pay the sums therein mentioned. This command it has been the practice of the courts from time immemorial to enforce by proceedings for contempt.⁴³

§ 1836. Jurisdiction of Court.

The contempt for failure to pay alimony may be punished by the court having jurisdiction of the divorce suit,⁴³ or by another court given jurisdiction by statute.⁴⁴

§ 1837. Proceedings in Contempt.

The proceedings in contempt depend on local practice, and may be brought as an original proceeding or may be part of the proceedings in divorce.⁴⁵

The proceedings are remedial in nature and may be prosecuted by the plaintiff in the divorce suit⁴⁶ when attachment or sequestration would not avail.⁴⁷

§ 1838. Enforcement of Interlocutory Order.

paid the court has authority on petition filed after the decree to enforce payment of instalments.⁴⁸ But the violation of a preliminary injunction cannot be punished as for a contempt after the dissolution of this injunction by being merged in a final decree. As the injunction is dissolved, what was before unlawful when it was in force becomes lawful, and no basis remains upon which to predicate a proceeding in contempt.⁴⁹

§ 1839. Enforcement of Contract to Pay Alimony.

A mere contract to pay alimony cannot be enforced by contempt proceedings.⁵⁰ § 1840. Demand and Notice.

Proceedings in contempt should usually be begun only after demand,⁵¹ and personal service must be made to give the husband proper notice of the proceedings, as summary action cannot be taken.⁵²

§ 1841. Trial by Jury.

The defendant in contempt proceedings is not entitled to a trial by jury.¹

§ 1842. Defences in General.

The defendant cannot set up defences which were or might have been set up in the divorce suit as adultery of the wife.²

The pendency of a motion to set aside the judgment is no excuse for a failure to pay alimony.³ Defences not set up are regarded as waived.⁴

The husband cannot set up in defence of a claim for alimony that money due him has been attached in his action for divorce.⁵

§ 1843. Inability to Pay as a Defence.

Failure to pay alimony as ordered is not a contempt per se,⁶ but will be when the defendant is of sufficient ability to pay.⁷ The defendant should not be committed to jail on failure to pay where it appears that he is unable to do so,⁸ or where he has lost his property,⁹ and there is no contempt where the defendant is unable to pay even though his inability arises from his wilful refusal to work.¹⁰ The defendant should not be committed for contempt in failure to pay where the record shows that he was discharged on his sworn answer of inability to pay.¹¹

The burden of proving inability to obey an order of the court is on the defendant.¹²

§ 1844. Wife's Earnings Not a Defence.

It is no defence to contempt proceedings that the wife earns sufficient to support herself.¹³ contempt,¹⁴ but a claim of ignorance of what was required of him is not a defence,¹⁵ and even a refusal to pay because the defendant questions the legal effect of the order for payment will be contempt.¹⁶

§ 1846. Dismissal of Divorce Suit as Defence.

Arrears of temporary alimony are superseded by the entry of a final judgment dismissing the libel.¹⁷ § 1847. Absence from Jurisdiction; Extradition.

An order will not issue for contempt against one without the jurisdiction, as it would be futile.¹⁸

The husband is not subject to extradition as a fugitive from justice if he is living apart from his wife in the State of his domicile and leaves her when not in arrears in payment of the sum agreed for her support and goes to another State, and subsequently fails to pay the amount agreed upon.¹⁹

§ 1848. Enforcement Against Beneficiary Under Spendthrift Trust.

The wife of a beneficiary under a spendthrift trust cannot subject to her alimony decree the trust funds.²⁰ § 1849. Order.

An order adjudging one in contempt should state that he owed a specified amount and that his failure to pay prejudiced the rights of the plaintiff,²¹ and the failure of the order in contempt to recite the ability of the defendant to pay alimony does not vitiate it.²² An order requiring the defendant to join with his wife in a deed does not require him to execute a warranty deed,²³ and an order denying a motion for contempt of an original order for alimony is not a bar to a motion based on a modified order.²⁴

§ 1850. Imprisonment.

Where the husband fails to pay alimony as ordered he may be imprisoned for contempt until he does pay.²⁵ Statutes sometimes limit the term of imprisonment,²⁶ or provide against imprisonment for more than once.²⁷

In some States the order of imprisonment must show that the defendant has no property which may be attached.²⁸ § 1851. Imprisonment for Contempt Is Not for a Debt.

A claim for alimony is not a debt within the prohibitions of the statute against imprisonment for debt.²⁹ So a statute providing for imprisonment for failure to carry out an order for support or alimony is not void as providing for imprisonment for debt as applied to an order to pay a certain sum monthly for support of a minor daughter as an allowance for the support of a minor child bears no resemblance whatever to a debt.³⁰ Furthermore, one imprisoned for failure to pay alimony is not imprisoned merely for debt, but also for contempt, and therefore cannot be released on taking the poor debtor's oath.³¹

A decree ordering the wife to pay over to the husband a trust fund beyond the jurisdiction of the court is not "for the payment of money" so as to be enforceable by execution, and may therefore be enforceable by contempt under a statute providing for cases where payment cannot be enforced by execution.³²

§ 1852. When Statute Providing for Imprisonment is Ex Post Facto.

Although a decree for alimony was rendered before the passage of a statute providing for the imprisonment of one failing to pay the alimony as ordered, still he may be punished under this law, and the law is not ex post facto as to him. Here the defendant did not refuse to comply with the terms of the decree until after the law went into effect, and it did not therefore affect him in any way until after his refusal to obey the order of the court.³³

§ 1853. Purging of Contempt.

After commitment the defendant must purge himself and obtain his liberty on application to the court which committed him,³⁴ and he has a right to purge himself of the contempt by payment,³⁵ and may purge himself of contempt by showing actual inability and surrendering what he has.³⁶ title placed in the hands of another for the same reason.³⁸ The purchaser is not protected where he has knowledge,³⁹ and the plaintiff need not prove actual knowledge of the fraud, but it is sufficient to show knowledge of suspicious circumstances.⁴⁰

Such a conveyance will be valid when made before the husband had any knowledge of the intention of the wife to bring such proceedings,⁴¹ and conveyances by a man fearing divorce proceedings to defeat a claim for alimony will be valid in the hands of the grantee in the absence of evidence of bad faith on his part.⁴² So an order to pay alimony does not prevent legitimate transactions, as making a mortgage to a bona fide creditor or conveying property, where no alimony is due at the time,⁴³ and the conveyance may be sustained where it is to secure a debt owed at the time.⁴⁴

§ 1855. Conveyance Before Marriage in Fraud of Alimony.

There are cases in this country holding a voluntary conveyance by a man before marriage void as in fraud of her rights to alimony, but these are all cases where the right to alimony has arisen before the decision of the court, and none of these cases go to the extent of holding that such a conveyance is void in anticipation that the wife might some time in the future become entitled to alimony or separate maintenance against her husband.⁴⁶

It is, we submit, the law in this country that no litigant can be denied his day in court as punishment for refusal to pay alimony, and it is held by our Supreme Court that to order the pleadings of a litigant struck from the court records because he has failed to obey its order is a denial to him of his constitutional rights to be heard,⁴⁹ and this doctrine is peculiarly applicable to divorce cases in which the State is interested.⁵⁰

It is, however, the common practice of the State courts to refuse to hear one in arrears in payment of alimony. Although we believe for the reasons stated above that such action is unconstitutional, it is commonly held that alimony may be enforced by denying the defendant in arrears the privilege of the court,⁵¹ and an action for divorce may even be abated where the husband is libellant and is unable to provide for his wife during its pendency.⁵² The rule is that where the husband is in default in paying alimony pendente lite it is not an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court to refuse to proceed with the cause upon the merits until the order requiring the payment of such alimony is complied with, and the mere fact that the husband has appealed from the order adjudging him in contempt does not alter the case, as if an appeal would give the husband a right to a trial he could defeat the purpose for which such money was awarded.⁵³

But the fact that the husband is in contempt for failure to pay alimony on separation does not deprive him of his right to bring an independent action for divorce.⁵⁴

§ 1859. Security for Payment.

Under statutes in some States the trial court may require security for the payment of alimony,⁶¹ although the court may have no power after the lapse of a long period of time to order such security given.⁶² Furthermore, a decree for divorce may be revised so as to make the original decree for alimony a specific lien on the after-acquired real estate.⁶³

§ 1860. Placing Alimony in Trust.

Alimony should not be ordered placed in trust unless under certain peculiar circumstances,⁶⁴ and the court should not appoint a trustee for alimony awarded where neither of the parties asked for it, so long as the wife is mentally competent and does not come within the rule of being a spendthrift. It is not enough that it is for her best interests to have a trustee appointed, as one mentally competent is entitled to manage her own affairs.⁶⁵

FOREIGN DECREE FOR ALIMONY.

- SECTION 1861. Power of Local Court to Award Alimony After Foreign Decree.
 1862. Enforcement of Foreign Judgment for Alimony.
 1863. Effect of Foreign Decree on Land in State.

 1867. Foreign Suit for Maintenance.

§ 1861. Power of Local Court to Award Alimony After Foreign Decree.

Under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution a defendant in one State, in an action to recover alimony awarded by the court of another State, cannot attack the validity of the decree where the court which rendered it had jurisdiction of the parties.⁶⁶ Thus, where a decree of divorce is rendered in a proceeding where the court has jurisdiction of the parties by personal service, and where by consent an award of alimony is made in a lump sum, this is final, and the wife cannot obtain a separate decree of alimony out of lands of the husband in another State, although the court which rendered the decree had no jurisdiction over such land, especially where its existence and value was considered in fixing the amount of the alimony. Failure to recognize this decree as final does not give that due faith and credit required by the Federal Constitution.⁶⁷

A decree of a foreign court giving the husband a divorce is usually a bar to an action by the wife for alimony,⁶⁸ and the omission of alimony in a foreign decree for divorce is usually a final decree on the subject, and is a bar to an attempt to obtain alimony in another State.⁶⁹ But where a wife obtains a decree of divorce on substituted service, the husband not personally appearing, and the decree reserves the question of alimony for subsequent consideration by any court having jurisdiction, the wife may afterwards institute suit in another jurisdiction where the husband resides and has property and have her alimony determined.⁷⁰

Furthermore, an award of alimony by a foreign court is final as to conditions then existing, but does not preclude an award of alimony on grounds subsequently arising.⁷¹ So where the wife still lives in the State of the matrimonial domicile an action can be maintained by her for alimony, although the husband may have obtained a divorce from her upon publication in a foreign State. In view of the decisions of the Supreme Court the courts of each State are free to accord what effect they desire to decrees of foreign courts obtained without personal service or appearance. It is therefore no longer true that a divorce proceeding should be regarded as in rem and to ascribe to the court granting a divorce on constructive service jurisdiction of the res, or marital relation.⁷²

Where a wife obtains a judgment for alimony in a stipulated sum in one State and brings suit on this judgment in another State where the defendant is domiciled, the judgment is a bar to a separate petition under the statute for alimony for support,⁷³ but the pendency of the suit for alimony is not a bar to the suit on the judgment.⁷⁴ The claim for alimony becomes merged in the judgment, and this becomes then a suit on a debt of a different nature from the petition for alimony.

§ 1862. Enforcement of Foreign Judgment for Alimony.

The question of the enforceability of a foreign judgment for alimony seems to depend entirely on whether it is subject to modification. Under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution the courts of one State must enforce a judgment for alimony rendered in another State for a definite sum, but are not bound to enforce the judgment so far as it applies to future payments subject to revision of the court,⁷⁵ and an action of debt may be brought for amounts overdue on an accruing allowance made by a foreign court.⁷⁶ So an order for alimony payable in instalments, made in a divorce action in one State, subject under the laws of that State to modification, will not support an action as on a judgment in another State, as the same is not a final judgment for a fixed sum,⁷⁷ but a final decree for future alimony, which is not under the domestic law capable of being modified, is as final and conclusive as any other decree, and is entitled to full faith and credit.⁷⁸

An order for temporary alimony, subject to modification by the court rendering it, cannot be enforced by a foreign court, as such attempt might result in a conflict of authority.⁷⁹

It is now settled that, prima facie at least, a decree for the payment of a fixed sum of money found to be already due and payable to a wife for the past support of herself and her children, is to be regarded as a final decree, entitled to full faith and credit in another State, although an order for future payments, as a provision for future support, being ordinarily subject to modification at any time, is not a final order for the payment of money.⁸⁰

Action must be based on a foreign judgment and not on a mere finding of the foreign court,⁸¹ and a foreign decree for alimony will be enforced by action at law on the judgment, equity not having jurisdiction,⁸² except that a money judgment for alimony made by a foreign court may be enforced in equity in an action for contempt.⁸³

§ 1863. Effect of Foreign Decree on Land in State.⁸⁴

A decree as to alimony in one State having full jurisdiction may be conclusive as to the rights of the parties to land in another State,⁸⁵ and an order requiring the defendant to account for all community property may be enforced in a court of another State where the property lies.⁸⁶ However, a decree of a foreign State as to division of property will not be binding as to real property in another State whose laws prescribe a different division,⁸⁷ as the rights of the parties to real estate on divorce depend on the law of the jurisdiction where the land lies.⁸⁸

§ 1864. Fixing Alimony Based on Foreign Decree.

The court has no power to fix alimony based on a foreign decree for divorce under a statute authorizing it to enforce domestic alimony decrees,⁸⁹ and a statute providing that the non-payment of alimony shall be punished as a contempt of court applies only to judgments rendered within the State.⁹⁰

divorce is void cannot then attempt to enforce alimony allowed in the foreign decree as she is estopped,⁹¹ but a decree for alimony in one State is not waived by the wife appearing to defend an action for divorce in another State, and there asking simply for alimony for defence of the action in that State.⁹² It is a defence to an action on a foreign judgment for alimony that the plaintiff has remarried, and that remarriage causes the right to alimony to cease under the law of the foreign State.⁹³ Alimony cannot be collected in behalf of a minor son where ordered by a foreign court where the wife had released her rights, although the release was not binding on the son.⁹⁴ § 1866. Service Necessary to Render Valid Decree as to Alimony.

A decree of a foreign court which never acquired jurisdiction of the libellee is unenforceable,⁹⁵ and the foreign decree may be binding only to the extent of determining the matrimonial status of the parties and not alimony, where service is only by publication.⁹⁶

It is well settled that a personal judgment or decree for alimony rendered in a divorce case against a non-resident, where the only service is by publication, is void everywhere.⁹⁷ It is equally clear that an attempted service by publication upon a resident defendant who is personally present within the State and can be found therein confers no jurisdiction to render a personal judgment, § 1867. Foreign Suit for Maintenance.

Where a judgment in a suit for maintenance is entered on a stipulation which recites that the wife is without fault, and such judgment would not bar the husband from recontesting the wife's desertion in the State where rendered, it could not have that effect in another State,⁹⁹ but where a decree that a wife left her husband for just cause is a bar to proceedings for divorce on the ground of desertion in that State, the decree will also be a bar to action for divorce in another State,¹ and the decree of a foreign court, obtained without service of process, is not binding on the right of the defendant wife to obtain support in her domicile.²

DIVISION OF PROPERTY.

SECTION 1868. Power to Divide Property.

1869. When Divorce Denied.

1870. Agreements of Parties.

1871. Restoration of Property.

1872. Recovery of Dower.

1873. Considerations Determining Division.

1874. Land in Another State.

§ 1868. Power to Divide Property.

The court may by statute be given power to adjust property rights between the spouses on awarding divorce,³ but not where there is no community property and the wife has contributed nothing.⁴

Under a statute authorizing the court to order alimony or to divide the husband's estate and give the wife a share on a decree for divorce to her, the court cannot do both. A decree awarding the wife $25 a month is plainly an attempt to award alimony, and where the decree also awards the wife the personal effects and a life estate in the homestead, this is a division of his estate, and the decree is therefore irregular. Where the husband, however, pays the alimony during his life, and dies, this matter thereupon need not be further considered, and the court upholds the life estate in the wife as a division of his estate under the statute.⁵

We may add, in general, that recent legislation affects this whole subject in many parts of the United States; so that either in connection with a decree for alimony or without it, that court which, in the proper exercise of jurisdiction, divorces the party

§ 1869. When Divorce Denied.

It is constitutional to make an equitable division although divorce be denied.⁷ Under a statute permitting the court on refusing a divorce to divide the property of the parties on good cause shown, the court may properly do so where the property is the joint accumulation of both parties and the woman had worked hard and aided the man in accumulating it.⁸

§ 1870. Agreements of Parties.

Where parties on divorce make an agreement as to disposition of property it cannot be repudiated,⁹ but the agreement should be incorporated in the decree to be binding.¹⁰

§ 1871. Restoration of Property.

The court may on ordering divorce order the property of each party restored to him,¹¹ even where the wife obtains a limited divorce,¹² but where the decree is granted to the husband for the fault of the wife he need not give up his curtesy rights in her property,¹³ and an adulterous wife cannot recover property which her husband gave her before he learned of her adultery.¹⁴

A divorce decree need not adjust indebtedness between the spouses, as under modern statutes these may be enforced by an action at law,¹⁵ and the fact that the separate funds of the wife were employed in the improvement of the husband's lands does not create a trust in the land in her favor,¹⁶ but the wife may be subrogated to the rights of a mortgagee of her husband's property where she has paid the mortgage.¹⁷

A statute providing for restoration of property does not apply to land which the husband conveys to his wife or has conveyed to her for the purpose of defrauding his creditors. Equity will not aid one who has committed a fraud, and it matters not whether the creditor was actually injured or not, if as a matter of fact the debtor makes a conveyance for the purpose of defrauding his creditors.¹⁸

§ 1872. Recovery of Dower.

Under statutes in some States a woman who obtains a divorce for the fault of her husband can recover dower as though he were dead,¹⁹ or the court may in some States by statute extinguish the contingent right of dower.²⁰

§ 1873. Considerations Determining Division.

Under some modern statutes the court is empowered to divide the property of the spouses equitably between them on divorce,²¹ and the court may inquire beyond the name in which the property was taken,²² and may divide the property equally when accumulated by their joint efforts.²³

The legislative right to a portion of the guilty spouse's property is sometimes peremptory in favor of an innocent spouse of either sex,²⁴ and in making division misconduct of the parties may be considered,²⁵ but the court is not bound to give a larger share to the party not in fault than to the other.²⁶

A decree in divorce should and will be presumed to include all the rights of the parties inter se. The fact that the husband had communicated to the wife a venereal disease is a proper subject of investigation in a divorce decree in determining the distribution of property, and it will be presumed that it was so investigated and considered, and therefore the wife is barred from making any further claim on account of it.²⁷

CUSTODY OF CHILDREN; JURISDICTION.

§ 1875. The Custody of the Offspring.

Another ancillary procedure of great delicacy in a divorce suit relates to the custody of the minor offspring. The court here exercises discretion, as generally in the chancery award of custody; the power being often reserved to open, alter, and modify the decree of divorce in this respect from time to time. There may be temporary custody besides the more permanent award. Children of fourteen and upwards should be consulted as to their wishes, though such wish is not conclusive; while as for those younger, and, most of all, offspring of tender age, the court will exercise ample direction; the true interest of each child furnishing the main principle for judicial guidance. Fault of the one or the other spouse, and the obvious unfitness of either or both to be guardian of the child's morals or maintenance, are considerations; so is the sex of the child. An equal, or nearly equal, division of the offspring is appropriate where blame is not great on either side: tender infants and young girls to the mother, boys to the father. The common-law preference of father to mother; an award, perhaps, so that each parent may have access — all these furnish suggestions, variable according to the circumstances, and calling for both a humane and just exercise of this painful judicial discretion.³⁵ § 1876. Power to Award Custody of Children.

The divorce court commonly has jurisdiction over the custody of minor children,³⁶ and is not bound by a previous judgment of another court between the same parties³⁷ as the conditions of the parties are constantly changing.

§ 1877. Power to Award Custody Without Service on Parent.

The act of the court of the domicile of the mother in awarding to her the custody of the child in a proceeding for divorce without personal service on the father is not a deprivation of his property within the Fourteenth Amendment. The right of custody of the father of his child is not a property right. The father is the natural guardian, but for nurture only, he is the trustee for the child, to protect, rear and train it for the duties of life. Incidentally he is entitled to its reasonable services. But he has no property right in the child. He cannot compel it to do service for another. If the right to custody were a property right the father could not be deprived of it without compensation, but the courts have full right to award the custody to the mother.³⁸

The court may have jurisdiction to ward custody even though the father is not domiciled in the State and the mother forcibly brings the child in the State to give the court jurisdiction.³⁹

§ 1878. Jurisdiction of Child.

Where the court has jurisdiction of the parties it has power to award custody of the children, although they may not be in the jurisdiction at the time,⁴⁰ and are not brought personally before

It is the duty of the court, and not the jury, to award the custody of the minor children. Cureton v. Cureton, 132 Ga. 745, 65 S. E. 65.

In a divorce suit, so far as the children are concerned, the court, under the statute, can make orders only concerning their custody pending the suit or upon granting a divorce. Thomas v. Thomas (1911), 250 Ill. 354, 95 N. E. 345, rev. judg. (1910) 155 Ill. App. 619.

the court,⁴¹ but the court has no power to award custody of a child residing in another State.⁴²

The children of American citizens remain subject to the jurisdiction of the court notwithstanding the mother's marriage to a foreigner, and the children may remain wards of the court.⁴³

The domicile of an infant is of importance where its property rights are concerned, but not in a divorce case where the welfare of the child is the controlling consideration as to its custody. So when the child has been awarded to the mother by a court where the mother resides, and the child happens to be found in the State of the father's domicile, that court is not bound to restore possession of the child to him as a matter of right.⁴⁴

§ 1879. Removal of Child from Jurisdiction.

The court may forbid the removal of the child from the jurisdiction,⁴⁵ or may permit the removal of the child from the jurisdiction where that seems best for the child,⁴⁶ and the court's jurisdiction to award custody is not ousted by removal of the child from beyond the State.⁴⁷

Where a non-resident father is found to be respectable and honest and a business man of standing, and is awarded the custody of his child during three months of each year, the court should not require him to give bond as a condition for allowing him to take the child out of the State.⁴⁸

§ 1880. Parties to Proceedings for Custody.

In a proceeding by the parent to obtain custody of the child the child is not a proper party.⁴⁹

§ 1881. Jurisdiction to Award Custody Based on Pleadings.

The pleadings should contain a prayer for custody of the children,⁵⁰ although it is not always necessary,⁵¹ and the court has no authority to proceed in questions not covered by the pleadings, and cannot, for example, change the custody of children on a petition by the mother to order the father to contribute to their custody.⁵²

Where a petition for divorce is silent concerning the existence or custody of children, and a cross-bill is filed asking for the custody of the children and not seeking a divorce, the court has no right to refuse to dismiss the original bill at the request of the libellant for the purpose of retaining jurisdiction as to custody of the children. A defendant will not be permitted to file a cross-bill for a purpose which is equally available by an answer, and as all questions regarding custody could have been raised by an answer the cross-bill should be dismissed.⁵³

Indeed, alimony, the custody of offspring, and certain other matters branch out of a divorce suit as proceedings purely ancillary to the main issue, distinct, and yet often quite comprehensive of themselves. Jurisdiction of divorce courts for awarding custody of the children is purely of statutory or chancery origin, and ecclesiastical courts never exercised it.

§ 1882. Order for Custody When Divorce Denied.

It is often held in this country that the court cannot make decrees concerning the custody of children where a divorce is denied, but can do so only during the pendency of the suit or upon a final hearing where the divorce is decreed, as jurisdiction in divorce is statutory in this country.⁵⁴ It seems to be the modern rule, however, that the custody of the children can be granted to one of the parties where a divorce is denied, but these decisions rest either upon a statute conferring such power or upon supposed general equity powers of the court,⁵⁵ as where both parties are equally in the wrong.⁵⁶

The early decisions which held in accordance with the former common-law rule, that the court could not give the custody of the children to the mother and require the father to provide for their support, except as an incident to a decree of divorce or of separation, are not in harmony with the present state of the law; and the decisions which, by construction, restricted the operation of statutory provisions containing no restrictive terms to cases in which statutory grounds for a separation had been established, have lost much of their persuasive force. It is now settled that the court, under its general equitable powers and without statutory authority, may provide for a separate maintenance for the wife and her children, although she seeks neither a divorce nor a decree of separation, if she establishes a legal cause for living separate and apart from her husband.

It is also settled that if a divorce be granted for the misconduct of the husband, and the custody of the children be awarded to the wife without any provision concerning their support, the obligation of the husband to support them still continues and may be enforced in a separate action.

It is also settled in all jurisdictions that if for any reason a husband and wife have in fact separated and are living apart, the court, when its power is invoked by habeas corpus proceedings, may determine which parent shall have custody of the children, and that the court in such cases will place the interests of the children above the rights of either parent, and will make such provision for their care and custody as will best secure their future welfare.⁵⁷

The custody of the children is entirely in the discretion of the court, which will be sustained unless abused,⁶⁶ and a judgment of the lower court made as to the custody of the children after talking with them will be reversed only on discovery of very grave errors, as the lower court is in much better position to judge than the appellate court.⁶⁷

§ 1886. Welfare of Child the Test.

In awarding the custody of the children the paramount consideration must be their welfare.⁶⁸

The physical, moral, and spiritual welfare of the child is the only safe guide in cases of the custody of the child in divorce proceedings. The love of the mother for her child, regardless of conditions and environments, has been proven by the history of the ages, and while her devotion can be counted upon most unfailingly, it is sad to say that sometimes the tie between father and child is § 1887. Domicile of Child.

In considering the best interests of the child the domicile of the infant is unimportant, and custody may be awarded to the mother who has the child within the State although the father is a non-resident.¹

§ 1888. Fault and Character of Parties.

The character of the parties is vital on all questions of the custody of the children,² and custody will usually be awarded to the party who is not at fault if otherwise able to care for the children,³ but the party obtaining a divorce is not entitled to the

the purpose of obtaining a divorce,⁹ and where the father is granted a divorce for adultery of the mother, who marries her paramour as soon as possible after the decree, the custody will be granted to him.¹⁰

Where the husband married the wife to end a prosecution against him, and he subsequently obtains a divorce against her for desertion, she will be granted the custody of the children.¹¹

The subsequent remarriage of one of the parties does not make or impair his fitness for custody of the children, although he married in violation of an order against remarriage.¹²

In a contest between parents for the possession of a child, witnesses should not be permitted to testify that one or the other of the parties is an unfit and improper person, or that the interest of the child will be best subserved by giving it to one of the contending parties. Evidence touching the character, conduct, and reputation of either of the parties, or any other evidence tending to throw light on their fitness to be the custodian of the child, is admissible; but conclusions deducible from this testimony are not the subject-matter of opinion by the witnesses.¹³

§ 1889. Preference to Father.

Under the early common law the father was entitled to the custody of the children as against the mother under almost all circumstances, and the cases were few and exceptional in which their custody could be given to her, although she lived apart from her husband on account of his misconduct. The rule governing these relations has been gradually changing until now the rule giving the father the custody of the children as against the mother has been entirely abrogated in most States and they are now usually on an equal footing.¹⁴

The doctrines of the common law have, however, still some influence, and where the claims of the parties are equal it is often said that the father's rights to the custody of the children are paramount.¹⁵ So the paramount right of the father to custody of the children where he is granted a divorce must be considered, outweighing the wishes of the children,¹⁶ but the father's technical legal right to their services is outweighed by the consideration of their paramount welfare.¹⁷

§ 1890. Preference to Parents Over Third Parties.

The natural and legal rights of the parents will be sustained unless some good reason to the contrary appears,¹⁸ although the court may, where neither party is fit, award custody to an outsider.¹⁹ The mother has the preference over the paternal grandmother, other things being equal,²⁰ although custody may be properly given to the mother pending the proceedings where it appears they will be properly cared for.²¹ for some years, although she makes diligent search, and the child is meanwhile adopted by another woman of excellent character, who brings him up, the natural mother, on finding the child, is entitled to his custody unless it appears that she is not a fit person to care for him. The presumption is that the child will be better cared for by his own parents than by strangers, and therefore it is incumbent on the stranger to show to the contrary if he would retain the custody of the child under this rule. The fact that the child prefers to remain with his foster parent is not governing, as a boy cannot be allowed at pleasure to abandon his filial duties and select elsewhere a home more agreeable either to his desires or his worldly interests.²²

§ 1891. Preference of Children.

The preference of the children may be considered in a doubtful case,²³ but a statute giving children the right to choose with which parent they shall live is not conclusive, and the court may order otherwise.²⁴ § 1892. Wealth of Parents.

The wealth of the father²⁵ and the poverty of the mother are not determining factors,²⁶ but children may be awarded to the father, if a suitable person, where he is financially able to care for them and the mother is not.²⁷

The fact that the father is earning money and the mother is not, and that the father of the father is richer than the father of the mother, are not controlling circumstances as to the custody of the child of a divorced couple where it appears that the mother, through the aid of her father and brother, is furnishing and may be expected to furnish indefinitely all necessary care and comfort for the child.²⁸ § 1893. Age and Health of Children.

It is proper for the court in doubtful cases to award the custody of the older children to the father,²⁹ and the infants and younger children to the mother,³⁰ especially if the child is of delicate health,³¹ and daughters will more naturally be awarded to the mother.³²

Custody of children is frequently divided, giving to one parent for part of the year and to another for the balance,³³ or where there is more than one child some may be given to each parent.³⁴ § 1896. Effect of Foreign Decree.

A divorce decree awarding custody of a child is not entitled to full faith and credit under the Federal Constitution in another State where the child becomes domiciled later. A child is not property, and the father can have no vested right in the child or its services under a decree divorcing the parents. The child is a ward of the State where he resides, and as such peculiarly under its guardianship, and that State is not bound to remand it to the jurisdiction of another State.⁴² It has been held, however, that a decree of a sister State as to the custody of the children is res judicata, and is entitled to full faith and credit under the Federal Constitution, but it does not conclude the question for all time, since new facts may create new issues. The relation of parent and child is a status and may be changed with changing circumstances, and the welfare of the child is the paramount consideration and may be best subserved at one time by awarding its custody to one parent and at another time just the opposite course should be taken. These judgments are necessarily provisional and temporary in character, and are ordinarily not res judicata, either in the same court or that of a foreign jurisdiction, except as to facts before the court at the time of the judgment.⁴³

That portion of a divorce decree awarding the custody of the child and giving the father certain partial rights to visit the child and to have the child visit him is of no territorial effect beyond the limits of the State where it is rendered. Where the mother and child remove to another State the terms of the divorce decree do not constitute a judgment which, under the Federal Constitution, is entitled to full faith and credit in the State where they are living. The child is now a citizen of the State where he is living, and as such is a ward of this State, and no longer under the control of the State where the divorce was granted. Infants are wards of the State, and their best interests must in all cases govern. Children are not in any sense property of the parents.⁴⁴

CUSTODY OF CHILDREN; MODIFICATION OF ORDER.

 1904. Death of Parent Given Custody.

§ 1897. Grounds of Modification; In General.

The modification must be based on some change in the circumstances,⁴⁵ based in some cases on the wishes of the child.

S. 442, 89 App. Div. 88 (decree should not be modified to permit the wife, a person of immoral life, to visit the children).

The decree as to custody is final as to the conditions then existing and can be changed only on altered conditions since the decree or on material facts then existing. Cariens v. Cariens, 50 W. Va. 113, 40 S. E. 335, 55 L. R. A. 930.

The burden is on one claiming that dren,⁴⁶ but not on the wishes of the parents.⁴⁷ Where it appears that a divorce decree was obtained by collusion it is not an abuse of discretion to modify an order for custody of children.⁴⁸ Quarrels over visits by the parent to the children may be avoided by a modification of the order.⁴⁹

The decree in a divorce suit awarding the child to one of the parents is prima facie evidence of the legal right to its custody, but is not conclusive in habeas corpus proceedings where the circumstances and conditions or unfitness of the parent arising since the date of the decree is involved.⁵⁰

§ 1898. Power to Change Custody.

An order as to the custody of children is not in the nature of a final order, but may be changed by the court,⁵¹ although entered on fact to show that conditions have so changed since a judgment of divorce awarding the custody to one parent as to render such parent an improper custodian, requiring that custody be given to another. Grego v. Schneider (Tex. Civ. App.), 154 S. W. 361.

Visits. Where the court awards the custody to the wife, with the privilege of the husband to visit the child at reasonable intervals, the husband abusing the privilege may be deprived of it, and the wife, discouraging the husband's proper visits by making them difficult and disagreeable, may have the child taken from her. Dimmitt v. Dimmitt, 167 Mo. App. 94, 150 S. W. 1107.

agreement of parties which cannot deprive the court of jurisdiction.⁵²

§ 1899. Proceedings to Modify Custody.

Proceedings for modification are in the nature of new proceedings and require proper notice to the opposite party,⁵³ and new evidence not available in the divorce suit.⁵⁴ So where the wife is successful in her divorce suit evidence against her character given in that suit is not a ground for showing the wife's unfitness.⁵⁵

Where a bill is filed to set aside an award of custody of a child made in a divorce case the child is not a proper party to the bill, and is at most only a nominal party, and it is no error to refuse to appoint a guardian ad litem for it, the mother, its custodian, being before the court,⁵⁶ but it may be required that the child be represented by the prosecuting attorney before the decree is modified.⁵⁷

§ 1900. Child Outside of Jurisdiction.

The court may retain jurisdiction to modify its order although the child is beyond the jurisdiction of the court.⁵⁸ § 1901. Grounds of Modification; Welfare of Child.

A decree for alimony may be modified so far as it is for the benefit of minor children so long as there are such children, as the duty of the father to the children arises from the relationship of parent and child, and wherever there are minor children to be cared for as wards of the court the court may act.⁵⁹

Custody should usually be changed only where the interests of the child require a modification,⁶⁰ where it appears advisable for the good of the child.⁶¹ So a modification giving a mother a right to visit may be refused where her visits have a bad effect on the child.⁶²

Custody may be taken from one who is teaching the child to hate a parent or is unfit for any other reason,⁶³ and the court has power to modify its order as to the custody of the child where it appears that the order has not been complied with, but that the husband's parents, with whom the child was placed, are trying to poison the child's mind against the mother, and the court may order that the child be placed a portion of the time with the wife's parents.⁶⁴

The fact that a child becomes ill does not affect the terms of a divorce decree giving its custody to the mother and denying the father the right to see the child.⁶⁵ § 1902. Grounds of Modification; Change in Character of Parties.

Modification in custody may take place where a change in the character of the parents has taken place,⁶⁶ as to give the offending parent a right to visit on evidence of his reformation.⁶⁷ So a divorce decree depriving the father of the custody of his child may be modified on evidence that the father had been for nine months after the decree was entered of a kindly disposition and leading an exemplary life, and this evidence may overcome the presumption against him afforded by the entry of the decree where the divorce was granted for cruelty, and it did not appear what was the nature of the unfitness on which the court acted, and where the mother has since become insane, and it appears that the father is very much attached to the child.⁶⁸

§ 1903. Grounds of Modification; Remarriage of Parties.

Custody should not be taken away from a parent to whom it was awarded merely on evidence of his remarriage,⁶⁹ and even the remarriage of a woman after divorce, going into another State to avoid a restraint on remarriage under the statute, is no such a breach of good morals or of public policy as to brand her with unfitness for the custody of her child awarded her under the divorce decree.⁷⁰ But where divorce is granted to the husband for adultery of the wife, and she then marries her paramour, an order for custody of the child will not be modified to give the wife custody for half the time.⁷¹

Where the parents of a delicate child had been twice divorced and remarried, the court may refuse to take the child away from the custody of an aunt where it is happy and well cared for.⁷²

§ 1904. Death of Parent Given Custody.

Where a minor child is given to the mother, the father is entitled to it on her death, as he is bound to maintain it,⁷³ although she attempts by will to give the child to her parents.⁷⁴ § 1905. Jurisdiction to Make Order for Support.

The court is usually given the power to order payment by either parent for the support of the child,⁷⁵ including medical treatment.⁷⁶

The decree should make provision guarding against the misappropriation of the money,⁷⁷ but will not usually be a lien on the estate of the husband.⁷⁸

Allowance by the trial court for the support of children will be sustained unless unreasonable.⁷⁹ § 1906. Support Considered in Awarding Alimony.

The fact that the wife is given the custody of children which she has to support may be considered in fixing the amount of alimony.⁸⁰ § 1907. Effect of Settlement Between Parties.

The settlement by the parties of their property interests prior to the divorce does not deprive the court of its right to enforce payments for the children,⁸¹ and where the sum agreed on by the parties on separation for the husband to pay the wife proves inadequate for the support of the children the court has jurisdiction to award more.⁸² An agreement concerning the care of minor children left with the mother will not include payments made for their support after they come of age.⁸³ children after divorce,⁸⁴ or pending the action for divorce,⁸⁵ or the husband may be ordered to support his minor children even where the wife is at fault.⁸⁶

§ 1909. Against Non-Resident.

The court has no jurisdiction if the defendant is a non-resident to award an allowance for custody of children against him,⁸⁷ but after the order is once properly made the father cannot evade the performance of the decree by absenting himself from the State or

Removal from State. changing his domicile, but it may be enforced against him like any other judgment.⁸⁸

The duty of a father to support his children after divorce is imposed by the State for the benefit of the child, and to prevent the child from being a charge on the State, and therefore this duty may be enforced wherever the child is at the time domiciled. So although a divorce is granted by a foreign court, proceedings for the support of the child may be brought where the child is domiciled.⁸⁹

§ 1910. Power After Decree in Divorce.

The court may usually issue an order for support even though the subject is not covered at all in the decree of divorce.⁹⁰ Although the divorce decree makes no order as to the support of a child, still, as this duty of the husband is a continuing one, the court may later, on the application of the wife, make an appropriate order under a statute providing that the court may make such order as may be right, and may make subsequent changes in it.⁹¹

§ 1911. Order for Custody Does Not Cover Support.

A statute merely giving the court jurisdiction to award custody gives it no right to order future support,⁹² and a decree simply awarding custody does not require support,⁹³ and where the children are on divorce awarded to the mother, the question of the father's liability for their support, in the absence of express direction in the decree, is a mooted question, and it has been held that under such circumstances she could not recover from him for their support. On the entry of the divorce decree the woman became a single woman, with the rights of a surviving parent, as fully as though the father had been taken by death. The father was divested of all paternal rights, and his paternal duties, if any, which survived were defined by the decree of the court in divorce.⁹⁴

§ 1912. Father's Liability for Necessaries After Divorce.

The liability of a father for necessities furnished to his minor child continues even after divorce,⁹⁵ and whether they remain in his custody or not.⁹⁶ Where the decree awards custody to the father without provision for maintenance, and the mother advances money for support, she can sue the father therefor, and is not limited to a motion to modify the decree,⁹⁷ and the mother may generally in an independent action recover sums paid for the child's support.⁹⁸ But an order cannot be made for the support of children where they have been supported by the voluntary act of the mother and her second husband under a statute providing for "necessary" support.⁹⁹

§ 1913. Division of Property.

The court has no authority to award the property of a parent to the children for their support,¹ and the court should not attempt to control the division of the property of the defeated party among the children.²

§ 1914. Criminal Liability.

Where a divorce decree gives the custody of the children to the mother and orders the father to provide certain sums for their payment at regular intervals, which he does for a time and then stops payments, he cannot be convicted under a statute making it a felony to abandon and contemporaneously neglect or refuse to provide, as the desertion occurred in this case long before the abandonment.³ But under a statute making it a criminal offence to fail to provide for a minor child, a father who fails to comply with a decree in divorce ordering him to provide for the support of the minor children is liable to prosecution.⁴

§ 1915. Modification of Order for Support.

An award for support of children can be changed by the court only as authorized by statute or by right reserved in the decree itself.⁵ Statutes commonly allow the court to modify its allowances for support of children from time to time according to the circumstances,⁶ but only on showing change of circum-

§ 1916. Termination of Liability for Support.

The father remains liable for the support of his children although they are given to the mother on divorce,¹² but only during the minority of the child.¹³

A contract by a father in settlement of a divorce obtained against him to make certain monthly payments for the support of his child during its minority is binding upon his estate. At common law a father is under no obligation to provide for the support of his children after his death. The court remarks, however, that such can only be the law when the family relations remain intact and when there is no great danger that such an arbitrary power will be exercised. When through the fault of the father his family is broken up, and his children become in one sense the wards of the court, this power is taken from him, and he may be compelled, if of sufficient ability, to give security for the support of his children that shall be binding upon his estate, or provision may be enforced by the court out of his estate.¹⁴ § 1917. Power to Prohibit Remarriage.

A decree that the guilty party shall not marry again until further order of the court,¹⁵ or remarriage by the guilty party within a certain time after the decree, may be prohibited by statute.¹⁶

§ 1918. Equity Jurisdiction Over.

A court of equity has no jurisdiction in matters which do not involve property or civil rights, and no such rights are involved in Barnett v. Frederick, 33 Okla. 49, 124 P. 57.

A decree of divorce, which restores the parties to the rights and privileges of unmarried persons, is in contravention of the statute which proa divorce decree forbidding the parties from remarrying again within a certain period when this is expressly forbidden by a penal statute.¹⁷ § 1919. Constitutionality.

A prohibition against the remarriage of one against whom a divorce is granted is constitutional.¹⁸ § 1920. Computation of Time of Prohibition.

Where the prohibition is against remarriage within one year a remarriage is void which took place on the same date as the decree a year later, although later in the day, as the first day should be excluded and the last included.¹⁹ § 1921. Remarriage Within Time for Appeal Prohibited.

A remarriage of the defendant against whom a decree of divorce has been entered at 9.30 of the evening of the last day of the prohibited period, where, in order to take an appeal, the notice must have been served and filed in the clerk's office several hundred miles away, and where it was then past the time for the clerk's office to be open, thus making an appeal practically impossible, may be sustained. The defendant knew at that time that no appeal would or could be taken and could, without violating either the letter or the spirit of the law, waive her appeal for two and a half hours and marry a third person.²⁰

Where a decree of divorce is entered by default the defendant has no right of appeal, and therefore may, it seems, remarry withhibits remarriage within certain periods Kidd v. Kidd, 164 Ill. App. 542.

out violating a statute against remarriage within the time allowed for appeal.²¹

§ 1922. Prohibition Against Marriage with Accomplice.

A prohibition against the remarriage of the guilty party in divorce with his accomplice applies only where there has been a divorce.²²

§ 1923. Effect of Good Faith of Party Remarrying.

The mere belief of the guilty party that he has a right to marry again does not make his marriage valid.²³ § 1924. Whether Prohibited Marriage Is Void or Voidable.

Where one marries again although not permitted to do so the second marriage may be void,²⁴ or merely voidable.²⁵

Marriages by divorced persons are commonly held void if entered into within the period after the decree when marriage is prohibited where this period is the time for appeal, or where the statute expressly declares such a marriage void,²⁶ but where the statute simply forbids such a marriage without declaring it void it will not be so held,²⁷ as the law favors the validity of marriages wherever possible.

The great majority of the statutes prohibiting marriage within a certain time after divorce do not expressly declare whether such marriages within such time are void or voidable, and such statutes fall within three classes: those which merely prohibit marriage within a certain time, those which declare the act of marriage criminal and provide a penalty,²⁸ and those which declare the parties "incapable" of remarrying within such period.²⁹ The prohibited marriage of the first class is usually declared voidable only, and the other two classes are usually held void.

§ 1925. Effect of Subsequent Cohabitation on Prohibited Second Marriage.

A marriage illegal because entered into contrary to a prohibition against remarriage within a year of a decree of divorce does not become legal by the cohabitation of the parties after the end of the year.³⁰

Where a marriage was void as entered into by one of the parties after divorce within the prohibited time, and where common-law marriages are void, such a marriage remains void although the parties continue to live together as man and wife after the lapse of the prohibited period.³¹ § 1927. Right to Marry After Expiration of Prohibition.

Either party can remarry after the expiration of the time within which the guilty party is forbidden to remarry.³³ § 1928. Effect of Prohibition on Right of Parties to Marry Each Other.

A prohibition against the remarriage of the guilty party after divorce will not prevent the divorced parties from remarrying each other.³⁴ § 1929. Effect of Prohibition on Contract to Marry.

A divorced person may within the prohibited period contract to marry beyond the period in the absence of statute.³⁵ § 1930. Extraterritorial Effect in General of Prohibition.

There is still considerable conflict and confusion of decision and theory as to the extraterritorial effect of a prohibition on remarriage. It was formerly the general view that such prohibitions had no effect whatever to prohibit marriages made in another jurisdiction, but the courts are gradually taking a less liberal view, and now such marriages, although still upheld where made, are discountenanced in the State of the domicile, especially if the parties went to another State for the purpose of avoiding the prohibition. They may even not be recognized in a third State having similar laws. Such marriages may not, however, be considered as crime or contempt even in the State of the domicile.

Every State has the power to enact laws which will personally bind its citizens while sojourning in a foreign jurisdiction and to declare that marriages between its citizens in foreign States in disregard of the statutes of the State of their domicile will not be recognized in the courts of the latter State though valid where celebrated. So a statute forbidding the remarriage of either party after divorce within one year applies to such a marriage celebrated out of the State between citizens of the State.

The court remarks that formerly statutes prohibiting the marriage of the party in fault have been construed as penal in their nature and having no extraterritorial effect. Marriages contracted outside the State have in this view been held valid in States having such statutes.³⁶ This statute is not, however, penal in character, for it treats the innocent and guilty alike, and declares the broad public policy that an incapacity to marry shall follow a divorce in any event. Where such a statute is enacted with a positive incapacity for marriage a marriage contracted in disregard of the prohibition of the statute, wherever contracted, will be void.³⁷

There are many decisions, however, holding that a State statute prohibiting the remarriage of a divorced person has no extraterritorial effect, so such a marriage celebrated in another State is valid,³⁸ and that a prohibition on remarriage is only effective in the jurisdiction where the decree is granted and does not invalidate a marriage in another jurisdiction.³⁹ § 1931. Validity of Foreign Prohibited Marriage in Domicile.

A marriage by one forbidden to remarry, celebrated in another State where the parties go to avoid the prohibition, will not be recognized in the State where the divorce was granted,⁴⁰ but if one of the parties is innocent the marriage may be valid even there,⁴¹ and it may be valid in the State of the domicile from the date of the expiration of the disability.⁴²

Where one goes to another State and marries to avoid the prohibition against remarriage in a divorce decree against him, and immediately returns, the marriage is void in the State of his domicile, and the issue of this marriage is illegitimate. The fact that he has a child living with him of this marriage does not make him a head of a family entitled to exemptions. Hence, the fact that he subsequently contracted a valid marriage after a fire and before trial does not make money received from the insurance company exempt from execution.⁴³ decree, and the parties then move to another State, the marriage is void there in view of the full faith and credit provision of the Federal Constitution.⁴⁴

This marriage will not be recognized in the courts of a third State where the parties become domiciled whose laws evince the same public policy as the State of the divorce as to remarriage. "Reasonable restrictions against speedy remarriage of divorced parties are becoming more common in the statutes of our States, and their intentional violation should find no sanction in States having similar restrictions. Only by each State enforcing public policies common to it and other States can our divorce laws be freed from the odium of being wilfully violated with impunity." "Comity between States is daily growing and should be encouraged." The fact that the parties cohabited in the third State for a period beyond the prohibited period is immaterial as a marriage void in its inception cannot become valid by the establishment of an actual contract of marriage after the removal of the impediment which rendered it illegal in the first instance.⁴⁵

§ 1933. Prohibited Foreign Marriage as Crime or Contempt.

Statutes forbidding remarriage of divorced persons within a certain period have no extraterritorial effect, therefore where a woman who has been divorced leaves the State temporarily and goes into another State, where she marries again and returns to the State of her domicile, where she lives with the new husband, no crime has been committed. The remarriage was not in violation of the law of her own State, as it did not take place there. It was not in violation of the law of the other State as no decree was ever entered there forbidding remarriage, and the marriage was good there where consummated, and is therefore good when the parties returned to the State of their domicile.⁴⁶

N. W. 785, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1170.

Where the statute forbids the remarriage of a divorced person within two years, and provides as a penalty that such remarriage shall be construed as bigamy, a divorced person who goes into another State and remarries contrary to the penalty of the statute cannot be found guilty of contempt. The court holds that the power of the court is dependent on the statute and the court has no power independent of the statute, and the consequences of a breach are confined to the penalty of the statute and therefore the court has no power to punish the defendant as for a criminal contempt.⁴⁷

§ 1934. Effect of Vacation of Divorce on Remarriage.

A vacation of a divorce decree within the prohibited period makes a second marriage within that period absolutely void.⁴⁸

§ 1935. Law of What Time Governs.

The effect of a divorce is determined by the law in force when it was granted.⁴⁹

§ 1936. Mutual Rights Pending Divorce Proceedings.

The mutual rights of a married pair, pending divorce proceedings, sometimes, though rarely, receive attention in the courts: as, for instance, where a wife receives injuries from a third person while living apart from her husband, and afterwards obtains a divorce.⁵⁰ But though she claims to own the conjugal dwelling-

49. Whitsell v. Mills, 6 Ind. 229.

50. See Peru v. French, 55 Ill. 317. In matters relating to marriage and divorce, the writer acknowledges his indebtedness to the justly valued treatise of Mr. Bishop. Yet he confesses his inability to follow those who argue that lax divorce laws will mend lax morals; not that either strict or lax divorce laws can fully subdue crime; but because history teaches that loose laws rather stimu-

house, and has left it because of her husband's adultery, she has no right, independently of legislation, to require him to vacate before divorce is granted, even though consistently refusing to cohabit there.⁵¹ So, too, the wife cannot be compelled to vacate the matrimonial dwelling while her husband's bill for divorce is pending; but, upon the decree of absolute divorce, her rights to all or any part of the premises ceases, and by remaining she becomes an intruder.⁵² § 1937. Death After Decree Nisi and Before Final Decree.

Where one of the parties dies after a decree nisi has been entered, and before the entry of a final decree, this puts an end to the suit and prevents the entry of a decree absolute.⁵³ § 1938. Effect of Decree of Separation.

Divorce from bed and board, or nisi, produces, however, no such sweeping results as does absolute divorce, the cardinal doctrine late than check marital infidelity; while it is found otherwise with countries where stricter laws have prevailed. To say that crime causes the divorce, not divorce the crime, is illogical; the one acts upon the other in any community. As one's familiarity with death tends to make him rather reckless than serious, ferocious than compassionate; and as contact with criminal courts almost inevitably corrupts the young; so the influence of divorces, when of common occurrence, is to deteriorate the national character. When parties united in the solemn responsibilities of marriage can coolly discuss and arrange the preliminaries of final dissolution, and haste to obtain judicial relief, for the purpose of forming a new union, as is sometimes done in our land, they are hardly fitted to discharge nature's highest obligations to one another; certainly they cannot do justice to their children or to society. Thus may marriage lose half its significance by parting with all of its sanctity. And see, as to one's remaining on the other's premises, Chapman v. Chapman, 25 N. J. Eq. 394; Brown v. Smith, 83 Ill. 291.

51. Chapman v. Chapman, 25 N. J. Eq. 394.

52. Brown v. Smith, 83 Ill. 291. But if, with her husband's consent, she keeps possession of lands to which her husband holds the legal title, she is at least a tenant at will, and entitled to a notice to quit. Wilson v. Merrill, 38 Mich. 707.

here being that the marriage remains in full force, although the parties are allowed to live separate. Here we must consult the phraseology of local statutes with especial care, in order to determine the respective rights and duties of the divorced parties. Thus the consequence of judicial separation, under the present divorce acts of England, is to give to the wife, so long as separation lasts, all property of every description which she may acquire, or which may come to or devolve upon her, including estates in remainder or reversion; and such property may be disposed of by her in all respects as if she were a feme sole; and if she dies intestate it goes as if her husband had then been dead.⁵⁴

In this country, independently of statutory aid, the property rights of the parties divorced from bed and board remain in general unchanged. For this divorce is only a legal separation, terminable at the will of the parties; the marriage continuing in regard to everything not necessarily withdrawn from its operation by the divorce.⁵⁵ Thus, the husband still inherits from the wife, and the wife from the husband; the one takes his curtesy, the other her dower; and even the right of reducing the wife's choses in action into possession still remains to the guilty husband.⁵⁶ But chancery, by virtue of its jurisdiction in awarding the wife her equity to a settlement, may, and doubtless will, keep the property from his grasp, and do to both what justice demands.⁵⁷

On principle, the husband's right to administer on his wife's estate would seem not to be forfeited by his divorce from bed and board. Nor the wife's on her husband's estate. But it should be remembered that the wife's claim to administer, unlike the husband's, is not superior, but only equal, to that of the next of kin. So, too, in the case of both husband and wife, divorce from bed and board may be thought a good reason why the court should refuse to issue letters of administration to the guilty party, where others are interested in the estate, and the judge has discretion in the matter of appointment.⁵⁸

The English statutes give the wife, upon sentence of judicial separation, the capacity to sue and be sued on somewhat the same footing as a feme sole. The rule in the United States is not uniform; but the tendency is clearly in the same direction.⁵⁹

A decree of limited divorce or separation does not dissolve the marriage ties and leaves the wife entitled to support,⁶⁰ and leaves the parties as they were before except as their condition is altered by the decree,⁶¹ but in at least one State by statute the wife can sue the husband for a tort after a separation decree.⁶² When the wife is given a limited divorce she is free to have a separate domicile.⁶³

The status of a divorced person is not clearly settled, but they will be regarded for most purposes as in the position of unmarried persons and as strangers to each other.⁶⁴

§ 1941. Right to Marry in Absence of Prohibition.

In the absence of some statutory restriction either party may remarry after divorce.⁶⁶ § 1942. Title to Property; English Doctrine.

The effect of divorce from bonds of matrimony upon the property rights of married parties is substantially that of death, or rather annihilation. And, save so far as a statute may divide the property or restore to each what he or she had before, or a decree for alimony may fasten directly upon the property in question, the guilt or innocence of either spouse does not affect the case.⁶⁷ This is a topic upon which the common law, from the infrequency of divorce, furnishes no light, except by analogies. The settled usage of Parliament has been to introduce property clauses to the above effect into the sentence of dissolution, regulating the rights and liabilities of the respective parties.⁶⁸ Even in these cases the rights of divorced parties as to tenancy by the curtesy, chattels real, and rents of the wife's lands, are still unsettled; and, in general, the consequence by act of Parliament "does not very clearly appear."⁶⁹

But under the English Divorce Act,⁷⁰ it is held that where the wife, at the date of the decree of divorce a vinculo, was entitled to a reversionary interest in a sum of stock which was not settled before her marriage, and had been the subject of a postnuptial settlement, and after the decree the fund fell into possession, her divorced husband had no right to claim it. Says Vice-Chancellor Wood: "Here the contract has been determined by a mode unknown to the old law, namely, by a decree of dissolution; and, as the husband was unable during the existence of the contract to reduce this chattel into possession, I must hold that the property remained the property of the wife."⁷¹ The English doctrine, as thus indicated, is that the same consequences as to property must follow the decree of dissolution by the divorce court, as if the marriage contract had been annihilated and the marriage tie severed on that date. Such, too, was the spirit of later decisions.⁷² And one who obtained a sentence of dissolution of marriage was held, moreover, not liable to be joined in an action for tort committed by his wife during the coverture.⁷³

But in settlements and trusts involving intricate family arrangements, the English rule is not yet uniform and positive. The cases show a decided indisposition to forfeit a husband's rights to a trust fund where, at all events, the effect of annihilation would be to disturb the remote right of some innocent party,⁷⁴ or without consideration as to which spouse offended. And in certain causes the Divorce Act⁷⁵ confers the power to modify the marriage settlement upon final sentence. Where application is made for that purpose, the judicial object of thus proceeding is, apparently, to prevent the innocent party from being injuriously affected in property by the decree.⁷⁶

§ 1943. Title to Property; American Doctrine.

In this country, the effect of divorce a vinculo is frequently regulated by statute. And in general, and independently of statute, all transfers of property actually executed before divorce, whether in law or in fact, remain unaffected by the decree. For instance, personal choses of the wife, already reduced to possession by the husband, remain his.⁷⁷ But as to rights dependent on marriage and not actually vested, a full divorce, or the legal annihilation, ends them. This applies to curtesy, dower, the right to reduce choses into possession, and property rights under the statutes of distribution.⁷⁸ These doctrines are set forth in local codes, which frequently save certain rights, such as the wife's dower where divorce is occasioned by her husband's misconduct. And a provision under an antenuptial contract, which is plainly intended as a substitute or equivalent for dower in case the wife survives the husband, is barred by their divorce.⁷⁹ ✓

On divorce each party is restored to the property they held separately before divorce.⁸⁰ Upon the dissolution of the marriage all the husband's claims to the wife's lands, which depended on the marriage, become extinguished, and she is entitled to possession.⁸¹ ✓ And her statutory disability to alienate such lands is removed.⁸² The effect of divorce upon a lease given by husband and wife, of the wife's separate property, would be to put an end to the husband's interest, but continue the lease as binding upon the wife and those claiming under her.⁸³

is not to be disturbed by a divorce. Thus, a husband's investment of property owned by his wife at the time of her marriage, as also the permitted proceeds of her separate earnings, in purchasing and improving real estate settled to her separate use, belong to her where creditors' rights have not been impaired;⁸⁴ and hence in case of a divorce granted to her afterwards for her husband's misconduct, his claim upon the fund will not be favorably regarded.⁸⁵ Deeds of settlement which expressly contemplate the survivorship, at a wife's death, of one who was her husband at the time of her death, by inference exclude from their benefits a man who has ceased to be such before her death, because of a full divorce.⁸⁶

In the case of a tenancy by the entirety having plain reference to a "survivorship," i. e. because of one's natural death, and not a conjugal survivorship, it would appear that divorce does not disturb the tenancy, but the joint tenancy lasts until one or the other party dies. See supra, § 397; Lash v. Lash, 58 Ind. 526. And see Beach v. Hollister, 76 N. Y. 262; Ames v. Norman, 4 Sneed, 683. But it is held that the estate by entirety ceases so far on divorce as to make the late husband and wife tenants in common. Harrer v. Wall-ner, 80 Ill. 197. And income of property settled during "joint lives" is held to terminate, as in case of death. Highley v. Allen, 3 Mo. App. 521. Sed qu. Where, however, a conjugal survivorship was plainly specified in the trust, as in the instance of an annuity payable "during the continuance of the marriage," divorce, of course, ends it. Harvard College v. Head, 111 Mass. 209. Otherwise, as in case of entirety, the analogy of death does not appear conclusive.

operates to divide equally between them the title to the estate formerly held by them by entirety.⁸⁹

Where an estate is conveyed to husband and wife as joint tenants and this relation is suspended by law, making them tenants by entireties, a divorce between them will restore the relation of joint tenants.⁹⁰

§ 1945. Tenancy by Entireties; Conveyance by Husband; Limitations.

Where the husband has parted with his interest in the land before the procurement of the divorce, the decree of divorce is not effective to make the wife and the husband's vendees tenants in common. The husband's vendees stand in the same relation to the land that he occupied before the decree for divorce, and the husband's vendee is vested with the right of the husband as it existed at the time of the sale, and if the wife survives the husband, she becomes the absolute owner of the whole estate by right of survivorship. The death of one tenant by the entirety effects a change in the properties of the legal person holding, and reduces the legal personage holding the estate to an individuality identical with the natural person, and the estate of the survivor is freed from participation by the other.

The wife does not have a separate right to the possession of the whole estate until the death of her husband, at which time she becomes the separate owner of the whole property by right of survivorship. She would not, therefore, be barred by lapse of time reckoned from the date of the conveyance made by her husband, and the statutory period would not begin to run until the death of her husband and she became entitled to the separate possession of the whole property by right of survivorship.⁹¹

§ 1946. Insurance for Benefit of Wife.

Divorce has no effect on a policy of life insurance in an old line company taken out by the husband, naming the then wife as beneficiary, where the husband, after the divorce, remarries and continues to pay the premiums, and makes no attempt to change the beneficiary. A legal proceeding like a divorce cannot be deemed to abrogate an existing contract in nowise involved in such proceeding. The rights of the company, the insured and the beneficiary became fixed upon the issuance of the policy, and they cannot be held to have become impaired by orderly litigation occurring afterwards over other matters. In this case, when the policy was taken out the husband was living on amicable terms with his wife, and there was no evidence that he at that time intended to provide for any future wife. The result is that the divorced wife remains the beneficiary.⁹² But a wife named as beneficiary in a fraternal beneficiary certificate loses her rights when she obtains a divorce, as the object of such an order is to provide for the family of its members.⁹³

§ 1947. Trusts.

Where a trust is created for the wife, with directions to pay the principal to her on the death of the husband, who is dissipated, the trust ceases on the divorce of the parties.⁹⁴ It is the general rule that where the object of a trust is to protect the property from the husband on divorce the reason for the trust ceases and therefore the trust ceases.⁹⁵ § 1948. Rights of Action with Third Parties.

If the wife has received an injury and afterwards becomes divorced from bond of matrimony, she should sue the wrong-doer in her own name without the joinder of her husband;⁹⁶ while for injury committed by her the husband is not to be joined as a party liable in consequence;⁹⁷ finally, the husband's own action, growing out of injury done to his wife, by virtue of the injury to himself, appears to become impaired.

§ 1949. Rights of Action Inter Se.

It is held, and upon that principle of sound policy which maintains inviolate the sanctity of the marriage union while discouraging stale and doubtful litigation to which their final and angry rupture might incite one of the married parties, that a divorced wife cannot maintain an action against her divorced husband upon an implied contract arising during coverture,⁹⁸ nor for an alleged assault committed upon her while they were husband and wife,⁹⁹ and she cannot bring an action against him for maintenance.¹

On the other hand, if the husband receives any property of the wife after divorce, she may recover it in a suit for money had and received,² and she may enforce a contract made with her husband for good consideration during marriage.³ How far on the divorce of the husband his assignee may claim against the wife does not clearly appear, but where the divorce was obtained through his § 1950. Decree Does Not Validate Prior Second Marriage.

Where the defendant in a divorce suit marries before the divorce decree the subsequent entry of that decree does not validate the marriage, and neither would the subsequent marriage of the successful plaintiff.⁵

§ 1953. English Doctrine.

In England, jurisdiction, on the one hand, is cautiously assumed over the divorces of subjects from abroad; and, on the other, foreign divorces of British subjects are readily repudiated, according to the latest decisions. Thus, where husband and wife were married and resided abroad, and, the husband deserting her, the wife came to England to live, the divorce court refused to take jurisdiction of a divorce suit on the wife's behalf, since the husband had never been domiciled in England;⁸ and so, too, where the husband, who was a French subject, acted as a consul in England, and in that country committed adultery.⁹ And while the English divorce courts recognize a Scotch divorce of domiciled persons who had been married in England¹⁰ (for such judgment is pronounced within British jurisdiction), they treat with manifest disfavor a decree of divorce procured in one of the United States, especially if one spouse went to such State without the other, and there was no positive change of domicile or transfer of allegiance.¹¹

It may be safely stated generally that the English courts decline to recognize a foreign decree of divorce as having extraterritorial force when both parties to the marriage were not subject to the jurisdiction of the court which rendered the decree.¹²

§ 1954. Foreign Judgment of Court Having Jurisdiction of Parties.

A divorce rendered by a court which has jurisdiction of the parties will be recognized in another jurisdiction,¹³ even when granted for a cause not recognized in the jurisdiction where the question comes up.¹⁴

A judgment of a foreign court is entitled to the presumption that it was authorized by law,¹⁵ but it is not evidence to be used in an action for alienation of affections between other parties.¹⁶

Where the present defendant in a suit for alimony had previously brought suit in Cuba, alleging that he was there domiciled and asking that his marriage to this plaintiff in Cuba be annulled on the ground that he had already been married in this State to her, and he obtains a decree of annulment from the Cuban court, this Cuban decree is binding in this proceeding. But the very decree which declared the Cuban ceremony to have been void declares the parties to be husband and wife under the law of Cuba and therefore is no defence to this suit.¹⁷

§ 1955. Indian Divorce.

An Indian divorce according to tribal customs will be recognized.¹⁸ So a divorce according to the Indian customs and laws terminates the marriage relation so long as the parties are still members of Indian tribes recognized by the government as distinct political communities, even though the divorce consists in a mere desertion by the husband. There is no difference whether the husband is a full-blooded Indian or a half-breed, or even a white man. If he marries an Indian woman and lives with her in the tribal haunts, and is there divorced according to the Indian custom, the same principle which recognizes the marriage as valid and the children as legitimate also recognizes the divorce. It is different when the parties leave the Indian haunts and customs and go to dwell in civilization. They then become subject to the laws of civilization.¹⁹ § 1956. Analysis of Status of Foreign Divorce.

There are four different situations under which the question of the recognition of the foreign divorce may arise.

First, where the husband obtains a decree in a State where the parties were last living together, commonly called the State of the matrimonial domicile. Such a decree, though rendered on constructive service, is entitled to full faith and credit under the Federal Constitution.²⁰

Second, where the wife obtains a decree by constructive service in the State of the matrimonial domicile. The prevailing view seems to be that where the husband leaves the wife without justification the matrimonial domicile stays with the wife, and a decree in that State on constructive service is binding anywhere.²¹

Third, where the husband obtains a decree in the State where he lives after the separation. Such a decree is not binding either in the State of the matrimonial domicile or elsewhere.²²

Fourth, where the wife leaves her husband and obtains a divorce on constructive service in the State to which she separates. Such a divorce is a fortiori void everywhere except in the State where obtained.²³

We shall in the following pages consider more in detail these four situations.

§ 1957. History of Views of Supreme Court.

If the framers of the Federal Constitution had made divorce a Federal question instead of leaving jurisdiction with the States, much of our present divorce evil would be avoided. They could not foresee that the thirteen colonies would grow and expand into a great nation of forty-eight States, each having its own laws and jurisdiction in divorce. They could not foresee that divorces, then comparatively rare, would grow into a great national evil, and that certain States should vie with each other by the passage of lax divorce laws to aid those of unstable or evil minds to free themselves from the shackles they may have lightly assumed.

The questions at issue are simple; only the results are complicated. If both parties are living in the same State there is obviously no difficulty. If they have separated and one lives in one State and the other lives in another, what court may grant the divorce? Here is the meeting point of two conflicting theories of jurisdiction: first, that no judgment is good without personal service, and second, that marriage is a res and that the court of the matrimonial jurisdiction has full jurisdiction. The requirement of the Federal Constitution that full faith and credit shall be given to foreign judgments of another State was in recent times held not to apply to a judgment granted without personal service.²⁴ Is judgment in divorce of that nature?

In the first great case where the question arose our Supreme Court seemed to answer that question in the negative,²⁵ but in the later and decisive Haddock case²⁶ the court took the opposite view and has affirmed this by later decisions.²⁷ When the Haddock case was decided there had grown up in most of the States elaborate systems by statute and practice of proceedings in divorce in the absence of personal service, and it was at first assumed that all this law was now in the waste-basket, but no such result was intended by the court or has in effect taken place. What the court in the Haddock case said was that a State need not recognize a foreign divorce obtained without personal service by a husband who had left the matrimonial domicile, but might do so if it desired, and most States have gone right on rendering such decrees and recognizing those of other States. It is said that the Haddock case has changed the law only in four States, namely, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania and South Carolina, which now decline to recognize foreign divorces obtained without personal service by spouses who have left the matrimonial domicile.²⁸

The validity of such divorces seems now to depend on whether action is brought at the matrimonial domicile or not. The final outcome of the controversy seems to be that if the spouse leaves the State where they are living together (the wife leaving for good cause) and goes to another State, and there obtains a divorce on substituted service, he can obtain a divorce which the first State may but does not need to recognize,²⁹ while the spouse who remains in the State of the domicile may obtain a divorce which must be recognized everywhere.³⁰

If the reader will bear in mind the above course of decisions in our highest court he will have no difficulty in understanding the mysteries of the subject as set forth in the following pages.

§ 1958. Effect of Federal Constitution.

Under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution a divorce granted in another State may be attacked for want of jurisdiction.³¹

The States at the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution possessed full power over the subject of marriage and divorce, and before the adoption of the Constitution the extent to which the States would recognize a divorce obtained in a foreign jurisdiction depended on their conceptions of duty and comity. The Federal Constitution delegated to the Federal Government no authority on the subject of marriage and divorce, and the Full Faith and Credit clause of the instrument did not destroy the authority of the States over the marriage relation.³²

§ 1959. Recognition of Foreign Divorce Depends on Law of State Where Question Arises.

country depends on the law of the State where the question arises.³³ § 1960. Jurisdiction Over Non-Residents in General.

The mere domicile within the State of one party to a marriage does not give the courts of that State jurisdiction to render a divorce decree against a non-resident who did not appear and was only constructively served with process which the courts of other States are bound to recognize.³⁴ § 1961. Necessity of Service.

A divorce decree, except by the court of the matrimonial jurisdiction, is invalid where the defendant never appeared and never was served with process,³⁵ and where a husband deserts his wife and goes to another State, where he obtains a divorce without actual service on or appearance by wife, such divorce is void in the first State.³⁶

A divorce obtained without personal service in a State which is not that of the matrimonial domicile is void,³⁷ but a divorce decree will be recognized where obtained in the foreign State where the

The courts in some States have taken jurisdiction of a non-resident on constructive service although the marriage was not solemnized in the State and no matrimonial domicile has been had therein.³⁹

Service at the last and usual place of abode will be sufficient where the defendant was actually a resident of the State at the time.⁴⁰

Courts have no jurisdiction unless at least one of the parties is domiciled in the State, and the appearance of the defendant will give no jurisdiction where the plaintiff was a non-resident,⁴¹ but where a divorce suit is brought in a court which has no jurisdiction of the defendant the decree will nevertheless be binding where the defendant appears and defends the case,⁴² or where the defendant is personally served in the State.⁴³

The statutes governing service by publication commonly provide some effort in addition to advertisement to warn the absent party, either by registered mail or personal service, and a divorce by publication may not be recognized where the record shows a lack of proof of service by publication,⁴⁸ or where the record shows a lack of the proper affidavit for the publication of the summons.⁴⁹ Mailing a letter to an absent defendant at her true residence is such an effort to give her actual notice as will make the decree binding.⁵⁰

to divorce, and does not prevent service in divorce by publication.⁵¹ Furthermore, the mere temporary absence of a spouse from the State does not render her a non-resident to justify service by publication,⁵² and where one spouse is confined by the other in an insane asylum in another State he cannot be proceeded against as a non-resident.⁵³

§ 1965. Personal Service Outside State.

The strongest possible case for a foreign judgment is made out where personal service on the non-resident is made on him in his own State. Here he cannot claim that the proceedings are a fraud or that he had no opportunity to protect himself, and judgments so obtained are recognized even in States which do not recognize judgments obtained on service by publication.⁵⁴ So when the State law requires personal service on the non-resident a divorce obtained without it is void.⁵⁵

§ 1966. Matrimonial Domicile; What Constitutes.

Marriage is now so far considered a res and divorce a proceeding in rem that the court of the matrimonial domicile may pronounce a judgment in divorce which will be recognized elsewhere, even without personal service. Matrimonial domicile usually means the place where the parties have last lived together as husband and wife, and it has been suggested that its true meaning is "where

As affecting jurisdiction to grant a divorce on constructive service, the domicile of the abandoned spouse becomes the matrimonial domicile, and so where a wife has been abandoned and moves to another State, and the whereabouts of the husband is unknown, she may there obtain a divorce by constructive service.⁵⁸

Where the parties separate by agreement even the husband cannot establish a matrimonial domicile to give the courts of that State where he lives jurisdiction to grant a divorce without personal service, according to the New York rule.⁵⁹ the acquisition of domicile may be attacked⁶² by showing that obtaining a divorce there was the sole reason for residence.

§ 1968. Rights of Court of Matrimonial Domicile.

The hardships of separation are practical and real, and the courts have done their best to solve them in a practical way. Some court somewhere should have the right to decide on the matrimonial status where parties have separated and are living in different States. It will not do to say that, as in other personal actions, the dutiful spouse must chase her erring mate and sue him where she can catch him. This would be impractical in many cases where the spouse takes flight and utterly disappears, and would be in any event a great hardship on a wife left suddenly without means even of support and with no facilities to hire detectives to ascertain the whereabouts of her recreant husband. One of the further difficulties of the situation is that if a husband who has been deserted by his wife cannot obtain a binding decree in his own State he is without remedy as if he sues his wife in the State where she is living, by that very act he would admit that she had obtained a separate domicile, and this would disprove his own cause of action that she had abandoned him in the State of his domicile.⁶³

Hence the rule as to notice necessary to give full effect to a decree of divorce is different from that which is required in suits in personam. The rule of Pennoyer v. Neff, that a judgment of a State court on a debt cannot be supported without personal service on the defendant within the State or his appearance in the cause, does not apply to divorce suits, as the jurisdiction which every State has to determine as to the civil status of its inhabitants involves authority to prescribe the conditions upon which the proceedings affecting them may be carried on within their own territory. So, where a wife leaves a husband and goes to another State, a divorce he obtains through constructive service in accordance with the laws of his State of domicile is good anywhere, even in the State where she is living and although she has there started proceedings, claiming that she left her husband for good reason.⁶⁴ And it seems to be now the settled doctrine of our Supreme Court that a foreign divorce decree is entitled to full faith and credit only when it is granted by the State of the matrimonial domicile or is based on personal service on one not domiciled within the jurisdiction granting the decree,⁶⁵ and in the majority of courts in this country divorce is held to be in rem, and therefore if one party be domiciled within the jurisdiction the other may be served by constructive service.⁶⁶

§ 1969. The New York Rule.

The New York courts, however, have for a long time contended that divorce proceedings were in personam, and that therefore no foreign divorce would be recognized unless the defendant was personally served.⁶⁷ But this doctrine seems now to be confined to cases where the defendant who was not personally served was a resident of the State of New York.⁶⁸

It is the New York rule that an action of divorce is one inter

partes, and the marriage relation is not a res within the State of the party invoking the jurisdiction of a court to dissolve it so as to authorize the court to bind the absent party, a citizen of another jurisdiction, by substituted service or actual notice of the proceeding given without the jurisdiction of the court where the proceeding is pending.⁶⁹ So, where the husband, a resident of New York, went to another State and there secured a divorce on constructive service, this decree is no bar to a subsequent action by the wife for divorce in New York. The adjudication of the foreign court that he left her for her fault is not binding on the New York courts.⁷⁰

Even in New York, however, the court is now bound to recognize a foreign divorce granted by the court of the matrimonial domicile, as this is the rule laid down by the United States Supreme Court,⁷¹ but the New York court reserves to itself the right to decide whether the decision of the foreign court as to where the matrimonial domicile exists is correct or not. But now even in New York a decree obtained in the domicile of the husband and also matrimony is valid everywhere although obtained only on constructive service in the absence of the wife, as the court may disregard a wife's unjustifiable absence from the State and treat her as having a domicile in the State for the purpose of divorce.⁷²

§ 1970. Wife's Independent Domicile.

There are some situations where the wife can acquire an independent domicile for purposes of divorce, and the usual test is the fault of the parties. If the wife wrongfully leaves the husband she can acquire no separate domicile, while if he deserts her, or if she leaves him for good cause, her own separate domicile will be recognized. Hence, in this country a wife who leaves a husband for good cause may obtain a new domicile for divorce or for suit for other purposes,⁷³ and where a wife has acquired a domicile independent from her husband a divorce obtained by him without personal service in his domicile is void.⁷⁴

Where the husband left the wife and went to another State, and there obtained a divorce, such decree is not a bar to an action for divorce by the wife in the State of the matrimonial domicile,⁷⁵ and likewise a decree of divorce in a State to which the wife had removed pending a suit by the husband in the State of his residence cannot be pleaded in bar of the husband's suit.⁷⁶ So, where a husband and wife are domiciled together in one State, and the husband leaves the wife and acquires in good faith a domicile in another State, and obtains there a divorce based on constructive service in accordance with the laws of that State, and the wife remains in the State of their domicile and brings suit there for divorce and obtains personal service on the husband, the court holds that the decree obtained by the husband is not such that the court of the domicile is bound to recognize it. The court does not question the right of the court which rendered the decree to enforce it within its own borders, or the right of the State of the domicile to recognize it as far as its own public policy might require.⁷⁷

Where parties were married and lived as husband and wife in one State, and the husband deserts the wife and goes in good faith to another State, not for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, and becomes a citizen of that State, and there obtains a divorce, giving notice in accordance to the laws of that State, but without the

77. Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 26 Sup. Ct. 525. This is the decision which is commonly referred to as having held that a man might be wife having actual notice of the proceedings, the divorce will not be recognized in the first State, and the wife may there obtain a divorce for desertion. The wife was innocent of any marital wrong when her husband deserted her, and therefore her domicile did not follow his when he went to the second State, but she was legally entitled to retain her matrimonial domicile in the State of her domicile. Where the parties are married in one State and there establish a matrimonial domicile, which is retained by one spouse, who is innocent of any marital wrong, and which is abandoned by the other, who is guilty of marital wrong, then the courts of the State of the matrimonial domicile have jurisdiction over the marriage relation and can proceed to adjudicate respecting it, although the other spouse had left that jurisdiction and cannot be reached by formal process. Thus courts of the State of the matrimonial domicile, at the petition of one spouse retaining that domicile and innocent of any marital wrong, stand upon firmer ground than the courts of any other State in respect of jurisdiction over the marriage status. This decision is made on general principles, and not under any statute, as it would be an unseemly result if the husband could return to the first State and establish there a new and lawful marriage relation directly in the face of a faithful wife whom he had deserted.⁷⁸ § 1971. Court May Decline to Protect Non-Resident Against Void Divorce.

Even courts of a State which protects its residents against a divorce granted without proper service may refuse to protect a non-resident.⁷⁹

§ 1972. Burden of Proof.

It seems to be the general rule that a foreign decree duly proved and presented is on its face entitled to respect, and the burden married in one State and not in another.

rests on one who attacks it as being made on insufficient service or as being void on other grounds, and the burden is on one claiming that a foreign divorce decree was obtained without proper service.⁸⁰

For example, one who attacks, before the New York courts, a foreign divorce as being made without jurisdiction has the burden of showing that at the time the divorce was rendered he was a resident of New York to entitle him to take advantage of the New York rule that foreign divorces obtained without personal service are void.⁸¹ So, a recital in a foreign decree that it was obtained by publication raises a presumption that it was so obtained and that the law of the foreign State justified such a judgment.⁸²

§ 1973. Estoppel to Claim That Divorce Illegal.

One who has participated in or acted upon a foreign decree will be thereby estopped to claim that it is valid, and clearly one who obtained the divorce cannot impeach the decree on the ground of lack of jurisdiction of the court.⁸³ Therefore, one who goes to another State and there obtains a divorce by publication is estopped to claim that such divorce is invalid, and that she is therefore entitled to rights in the estate of the husband.⁸⁴

Even a libellee who appeared in the foreign proceedings cannot object to the jurisdiction of the court where he did not make the objection of fraud before that court,⁸⁵ and a wife who colludes with her husband in his suit for divorce by going to a jurisdiction where neither of them are domiciled and appearing in his divorce libel and permitting him to obtain a decree, being paid for this action, and who then starts two proceedings attacking the divorce which she is paid for dropping, and who then herself marries again, is estopped from attacking the divorce on the death of the husband and from claiming that she is his lawful widow.⁸⁶

Furthermore, one who remarries on hearing that the spouse had obtained a divorce is estopped to claim that the divorce was illegal and to claim marital rights in the estate of the divorced spouse.⁸⁷

Also, one who aided the wife to obtain a divorce in a foreign State, and subsequently married her, will be estopped to claim that the foreign divorce was void, and he cannot invoke the public policy of the State not to recognize foreign divorces obtained without service.⁸⁸

§ 1974. Incorrect Name of Defendant.

A foreign divorce decree may be recognized although the libellee is not correctly named where she is named by the names she usually went by and was known by.⁸⁹

§ 1975. Effect if Foreign Decree on Interest in Land in State.

court may later order judgment to be entered nunc pro tunc to validate a marriage made in reliance on it.⁹¹

§ 1977. Void Divorce No Defence to Action for Criminal Conversation.

A divorce granted to one in a foreign State without personal service or appearance is not a defence to an action for criminal conversation against one who married the person obtaining such divorce subsequent to the divorce.⁹²

§ 1978 Effect of Void Divorce on Remarriage of Innocent Spouse.

Where the husband leaves the wife in New York and goes to California, where he obtains a divorce on service by publication, this divorce is void in New York, and therefore if the wife marries again in New York, and then removes to Illinois, where she lives with the new husband as man and wife for ten years, this is a void marriage, and the husband cannot be convicted of bigamy if he leaves this woman and marries another. It was claimed in this case that the cohabitation in Illinois constituted a common-law marriage, but the court holds that there is nothing in the record which indicates that the parties contemplated or desired a common-law marriage, or that they entered into such a contract. Their cohabitation was pursuant to the ceremony of marriage performed in New York, and neither of them doubted the validity of that marriage until after their separation, and therefore there was no common-law marriage.⁹³

§ 1979. Rule When Equity Demands Foreign Divorce Be Recognized.

The New York Court of Appeals has very lately introduced an important qualification in its rigid rule against the recognition of foreign divorces made without service. The court remarks that the rule is based on public policy and morality, and not on any legislation, and will not be enforced when its reason is lacking, even in a case technically within its purview. So where a man sued to annul his marriage on the ground that the prior divorce of his wife was void, as obtained without personal service, and it appeared that the wife had formerly lived with her husband in another State, and that he had deserted her and come to New York to live, and she had obtained a divorce in the other State for desertion and married the present plaintiff, and her first husband had died, common decency and justice requires that the present action be dismissed. The wife was innocent throughout, and the death of the first husband leaves no other party to be affected. In short, the rule should be used to prevent fraud and not to aid it.⁹⁴

§ 1980. Effect of Reconciliation.

A foreign divorce may not be recognized where it appears that the parties have become reconciled and subsequently separated.⁹⁵

CHAPTER XLVI.

FRAUDULENT FOREIGN DIVORCE.

- SECTION 1981. Foreign Decree Impeached on Ground of Fraudulent Evidence.
 1982. Foreign Decree Impeached for Fraud in Jurisdiction.
 1983. Moving to Another State to Obtain Divorce.
 1984. Fraudulent Concealment of Pendency of Another Action.
 1985. Foreign Decree for Custody of Children.

§ 1981. Foreign Decree Impeached on Ground of Fraudulent Evidence.

A divorce procured by fraudulent evidence cannot be impeached collaterally by a party as this would open the way to endless litigation, and no judgment would be binding.⁹⁶ So a claim that a foreign divorce was obtained by misstatements of the age of the libellant cannot be used to impeach the divorce decree.⁹⁷ But a stranger can impeach any decree for fraud, as this is his only opportunity to present his rights.⁹⁸

§ 1982. Foreign Decree Impeached for Fraud in Jurisdiction.

The full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution does not prevent the record of divorce of a sister State from being impeached for fraud in jurisdiction.⁹⁹

It is now settled that a State court has a right, without violating the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution, to impeach collaterally a decree of divorce made in another State by man, 224 Mass. 427, 113 N. E. 359; Burlen v. Shannon, 99 Mass. 200, 96 Am. Dec. 733; Dumont v. Dumont (N. J. Ch. 1900), 45 A. 107; Jung v. Jung, 96 A. 499; Hall v. Hall, 122 N. Y. S. 401, 67 Misc. 267, judgment reversed 123 N. Y. S. 1056, 139 App. Div. 120. See State v. Giroux (Mont.), 19 Mont. 149, 47 P. 798; Bidwell v. Bidwell, 139 N. C. 402, 111 proof that the court had no jurisdiction, even when the record purports to show jurisdiction and the appearance of the other party. So, although the other court has found that the libellant was there domiciled, still the court may consider de novo the question of domicile and decide that there was no domicile in the jurisdiction granting the decree, and that therefore that court had no jurisdiction.¹ And wherever the court is defrauded into thinking it has jurisdiction when there is none, the decree may be impeached collaterally.² If the fraud is outside of the evidence, as in preventing the party from presenting his case, the judgment may be impeached collaterally,³ and it is a fraud on the court which will prevent its proceeding being sustained in another State that the plaintiff concealed the true residence of the defendant and obtained divorce without actual notice.⁴

§ 1983. Moving to Another State to Obtain Divorce.⁵

A State need not recognize a divorce granted to one of its citizens who moves to a foreign State and there obtains a divorce, where he moved for that purpose.⁶ When the party, domiciled in one State or country, goes into another, as is often done for the sake of getting divorce on some ground not admissible within the jurisdiction,

6. Dickinson v. Dickinson, 167 Mass. 474, 45 N. E. 1091 (evidence showing going into another State to obtain divorce); Andrews v. Andrews, 176 Mass. 92, 57 N. E. 333, affd. 188 U. S. 14, 23 S. Ct. 237, 47 L. Ed. 366 (although wife appeared and objected to the plaintiff's residence and withdrew the objection on payment of money); McGown v. McGown, 43 N. Y. S. 745, 18 Misc. 708, 46 N. Y. S. 285, 19 App. Div. 368, judgment affirmed 164 N. Y. 558, 58

the risk is run of finding that divorce of no legal validity. No jurisdiction properly arises without bona fide domicile.⁷ So the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution is not violated by the refusal of a State court to recognize a decree of divorce by one who left the State temporarily for the purpose of obtaining a divorce in another State for a cause which was not a cause for divorce in the State where he was domiciled.⁸

But the mere fact that one went to another State with the predominant purpose of obtaining a divorce there will not invalidate it provided he went there with the intention of remaining.⁹

Hence, although a divorce decree procured in a foreign State, without personal service of process on the defendant therein, the latter having been made a party only by publication or other substituted process, under the foreign law, and the plaintiff in such proceeding having gone to the foreign jurisdiction solely for the purpose of instituting such litigation, may be successfully attacked by a bill for fraud in any other State wherein rights are claimed under such decree, yet such attack cannot be sustained when it appears that the party obtaining the decree removed to the foreign State with the bona fide purpose of making a home in that State, although entertaining at the same time a purpose to bring in the latter State an action for divorce as soon as a domicile therein could be acquired.

Jurisdiction of the person of the defendant may be acquired in the foreign State by publication, or other substituted service, although the defendant is, in fact, a non-resident. And this applies to either spouse, although the other has never been in the State where the suit is brought; and on such service a decree can be obtained which should be respected in another jurisdiction. The effect of such a decree, in a State that chooses to recognize it, is to free both spouses from the bonds of matrimony previously binding them. But it is optional with each State to accord recognition, or to refuse it, since a refusal has been held, by the highest authority, not to violate the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution. That is, the courts of the several States may still recognize such foreign decrees on the ground of comity. The fact that the State in which recognition is sought provides by its own laws for the rendering of such decrees in favor of a resident against a non-resident on publication indicates the duty of according validity on the ground of comity to similar action in other States, where there is no material evidence of unfairness, and the proceedings are not open to an attack of fraud. Such a decree will be upheld in the State of the domicile of the libellee where it appears that he had actual notice of the proceedings and that he employed counsel to watch the course of the action, although they entered no appearance and at his direction made no defence.

It follows that an order for the custody of the children made in such a proceeding is res judicata as to both spouses, and will not be changed in the jurisdiction where the libellee lives, although the libellant afterward goes there to live.¹⁰

§ 1984. Fraudulent Concealment of Pendency of Another Action.

The concealment of the pendency of another action for divorce between the parties is a fraud on the court, which renders its decree open to attack in another State.¹¹

§ 1985. Foreign Decree for Custody of Children.

A foreign divorce decree settling the care and custody of the children rendered by a foreign court having jurisdiction is entitled to full faith and credit,¹² and so an order modifying an order as to custody is also entitled to full faith and credit,¹³ but not where the foreign judgment was based on fraud;¹⁴ and it is even held that a court has no right to base its order as to custody merely on the decree of a foreign court as to custody.¹⁵

A foreign decree of divorce awarding custody of a child is not void merely because the child resided at the time in another State.¹⁶

But although the foreign decree is conclusive as to conditions existing at the time, it is not conclusive for all time, and the relation of parent and child being a status like marriage, regulated by the State in which the parties are domiciled, the orders of one State awarding custody of a child in divorce is not an estoppel of all future inquiry in courts of another State wherein the child has acquired a domicile,¹⁷ but the court may make such order as the best interests of the child may require.¹⁸ Notice of the inception of such proceedings is jurisdictional and must be served within the State unless the parent appears.¹⁹

FORMS

(It being manifestly impossible to supply forms adapted to the practice of every State, the Editor has attempted here to suggest New York forms which may be adapted for use in the Code States and Massachusetts forms which may be adapted for use in States having simplified common-law pleading. It is hoped that the bar in other States may use the language of these forms where applicable, but should in each State mould it to local practice.)

II. ANTENUPTIAL AND POSTNUPTIAL AGREEMENTS.

No. 6.

Antenuptial Agreement; Providing for Separate Enjoyment of Property After Marriage, for Payment of Money to Woman in Case of Death of Man, and Security Therefor.

This agreement made and entered into this fourteenth day of February, A. D. 1900, by and between John Corbett and Bridget Daly, both of Malden, Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Witnesseth: That in consideration of the promise and agreement of the said John Corbett to marry the said Bridget Daley and of the said Bridget Daly to marry the said John Corbett, it is hereby mutually agreed that both the said parties shall retain their respective estates with such as may hereafter accrue to them, separate and apart from the other, subject to the payment of their respective debts, with power to each to manage and dispose of their estates as they shall see fit, and at their decease to have the same descend to their respective heirs at law or otherwise dispose of as they may respectively by last will and testament order and appoint. In case of the decease of the said John Corbett she, the said Bridget surviving him there shall, within six months from the time of his decease, be paid to the said Bridget the sum of one thousand dollars from his estate. In order to secure the payment of the said sum, she, the said Bridget, immediately upon the decease of the said John Corbett shall have the sole use and possession of the premises numbered 92 Blackburn street, in Malden, being the northerly portion with the buildings thereon of the premises conveyed to the said John Corbett by Elijah B. Pillsbury and Susan E. Pillsbury by deed, dated September thirteenth, 1869, and recorded at Middlesex Registry of Deeds, South District, libro 1095, folio 240, and extending along Blackburn street 30 and $\frac{1}{2}$ feet from the northerly line described in said deed. If at the expiration of the six months the said sum of one thousand dollars has not been paid to the said Bridget, then she shall have the said estate in fee with power to dispose of the same. Upon the death of the said John Corbett, she, the said Bridget surviving, shall by deed release all interest in his estate excepting the said claim of one thousand dollars and the security of the payment thereof.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF we hereunto affix our hands and seals on the day and date first above written. John (X) Corbett. Bridget Daley. (Seal) Witness to both, Marcellus Conway. Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Middlesex, ss. February 14, 1900. Then personally appeared John Corbett and acknowledged the above to be his free act and deed before me, Marcellus Conway, Justice of the Peace.

No. 7.

Antenuptial Agreement; Settlement Made in Lieu of Dower, Etc.

WHEREAS a marriage is contemplated and is intended to be solemnized between William H. Hall, of Brookline, in the County of Norfolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and Caroline Wright Ruggles, of Wellesley, in the County of Norfolk and said Commonwealth, both of full age, and it is the purpose of said William H. Hall to make a definite provision for the support of the said Caroline Wright Ruggles in lieu of the rights which she may become entitled to in case said marriage takes place and she becomes his widow, and

WHEREAS, said Caroline Wright Ruggles agrees and wishes to accept said provision in place of and as a substitute for all the rights, claims and interests to which she may hereafter become entitled in or to all the property and estate of every kind, real and personal, of the said William H. Hall in the event that said marriage shall take place and she shall become his widow.

NOW, THEREFORE, it is agreed by and between the said parties mutually to bind themselves and their respective heirs, executors and administrators as follows:

The said William H. Hall, in consideration of the said contemplated marriage and of the covenants of the said Caroline Wright Ruggles hereinafter contained, hereby covenants that the said Caroline Wright Ruggles shall have out of his property and estate at the time of his death, if she shall then be his widow, the sum of Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand ($250,000) dollars for her own property outright, with interest from the date of his death, as a debt against his estate, in full release, settlement and discharge of all the rights, claims and interests which she might then become entitled to if this contract had never been made, except as hereinafter stated.

The said Caroline Wright Ruggles, in consideration of the said contemplated marriage and of the foregoing covenant of the said William H. Hall, hereby covenants that she will accept the said sum of Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand ($250,000) dollars in full release, settlement and discharge of all the rights, claims and interests to which she may, under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts or of any other state or country, become entitled in or to the whole or any part of the property of the said William H. Hall both real and personal and of every nature and kind and wherever situated in the event that she shall become his widow, except as hereinafter stated.

And further, she covenants that if by virtue of the laws of any state or country she shall, by reason of being his widow, become entitled to any other, further, or larger rights, interest, share or claim in, to, or over the whole or any part of the Property of the said William H. Hall wherever situated, that then in that event she will well and truly and without waste hold all of her said legal rights, interest, share or claim so coming to her in excess of the said sum of Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand ($250,000) dollars heretofore accepted in full settlement, so that the said excess shall be held in trust for the benefit of those persons who would be entitled thereto in the event of the said William H. Hall dying without a widow, and that she will release, transfer and convey the whole and every part of said excess to the use of such persons as soon as she shall have received full payment and satisfaction for the said sum of Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand ($250,000) dollars herein secured to her.

And further, in consideration of the payment of said sum of money, the covenants herein contained, and except as may be hereinafter stated, she agrees to waive and bar, and does hereby waive and bar, all dower and homestead rights, and any other rights, privileges and interests, statutory or otherwise, in the real estate of the said William H. Hall under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, or under the laws of any other state or country, any rights, privileges or interests, as an heir-at-law or as an heir under any statute of said Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and any and all similar and equivalent rights under the laws of said Commonwealth of Massachusetts or of any other state or country.

And by virtue of this contract she now specially agrees to waive and bar, and does hereby irrevocably waive and bar all dower and homestead and other rights, privileges or interests, statutory or otherwise, in any real estate

by the said William H. Hall in his lifetime conveyed, and she covenants and agrees that she will join in any such conveyance of any real estate now or hereafter owned by the said William H. Hall so as to release all rights and make a good title in the purchase; that a conveyance by him without her joining therein shall be sufficient to convey any of his said property free of and from any of her rights as aforesaid, and for further assurance she hereby appoints him, the said William H. Hall, to be her attorney irrevocably for her and in her name and stead to release all her rights in any property so by him in his lifetime conveyed.

But the said Caroline Wright Ruggles specifically reserves to herself the right to claim dower at law in any real estate not so by him in his lifetime conveyed. Any such claim of dower shall be on account of or instead of the sum of money secured by this agreement and not in addition thereto, and such claim of dower shall not avoid this contract, but the dower rights so claimed and assigned shall be held in trust hereunder as heretofore specified to be released upon the full payment of the money secured hereby, and in case the assets of the estate shall prove insufficient to pay the said money in full, then the dower shall be valued by actuaries' tables at four per cent and a sufficient amount of the dower at the appraised value to make up the deficiency shall be retained by the said Caroline Wright Ruggles to her own use, or the said Caroline Wright Ruggles may at her election retain at such appraised value any part or the whole of said dower on account of the money hereby secured.

It is further agreed that the said Caroline Wright Ruggles may receive any sum awarded by any court as an allowance to a widow, but any such sum shall not increase the maximum amount secured hereby, but any such sum so received shall be in part payment thereof.

Provided, however, and it is expressly understood and agreed that nothing herein contained shall prevent the said Caroline Wright Ruggles from accepting any property or estate or any interest therein which the said William H. Hall may legally give to her by his last will or may legally convey to her by deed or other lawful process in his lifetime, and said William H. Hall in no way limits or restricts his right and power to give said Caroline Wright Ruggles other and further property or rights by will or otherwise as he may see fit.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF the said parties have hereunto set their hands and seals in duplicate this sixth day of April, A. D. 1906.

hereby directed or authorized to be sold or for any other monies paid and for any stock funds shares or securities transferred to them or him by virtue of these presents or in the execution of any of the trusts or powers hereof shall effectually discharge the person or persons paying or transferring the same therefrom and from being bound to see to the application or being answerable for the loss or misapplication thereof. AND IT IS HEREBY AGREED AND DECLARED that the trustees shall upon receipt of the money to become payable under the hereinbefore recited Policies of Insurance the hereinbefore mentioned Government of India Promissory Notes for Nine thousand five hundred rupees and the monies to become payable upon the deaths of the said Laura Jones and Margaret G. Atkins as aforesaid respectively with the consent of the said Marshall B. Jones and Elizabeth T. Atkins during their joint lives and the survivor of them during his or her life and after the death of such survivor at the discretion of the Trustees invest the same and may with such consent or at such discretion as aforesaid vary the investments thereof. The monies to become payable under the hereinbefore recited Policies of Insurance and upon the death of the said Laura Jones and the investments for the time being representing the same as hereinafter referred to as "the husband's trust fund" and the Government of India Promissory Notes for Nine thousand five hundred rupees and the money to become payable on the death of the said Margaret G. Atkins and the investments for the time being representing the same are hereinafter referred to as "the Wife's trust fund." AND IT IS HEREBY AGREED AND DECLARED that the Trustees shall pay the income of the husband's trust fund to the said Marshall B. Jones during his life and after his death to the said Elizabeth T. Atkins during her life if she survive him without power of anticipation during any coverture. AND IT IS HEREBY FURTHER AGREED AND DECLARED that the Trustees shall pay the income of the Wife's trust fund to the said Elizabeth T. Atkins during her life without power of anticipation and after her death to the said Marshall B. Jones during his life if he shall survive her. AND IT IS HEREBY FURTHER AGREED AND DECLARED that after the death of the survivor of the said Marshall B. Jones and Elizabeth T. Atkins the Trustees shall stand possessed of the husband's trust fund and the Wife's trust fund In trust for such child children or remoter issue of the said intended marriage at such age or time or ages or times (not being earlier as to any object of this Power than his or her age of twenty one years or in the case of any female day of marriage) in such shares if more than one upon such conditions and in such manner as the said Marshall B. Jones and Elizabeth T. Atkins shall by any Deed or Deeds revocable or irrevocable jointly appoint. AND in default of and subject to any such appointment then as the survivor of the said Marshall B. Jones and Elizabeth T. Atkins shall by any Deed or Deeds revocable or irrevocable or by Will or Codicil appoint and in default of and subject to any such appointment In trust for all the children of the said intended marriage who being Sons attain the age of twenty-one years or being daughters attain that age or marry under that age in equal shares and if there shall be but one such child then the whole to be in trust for that one child. But so nevertheless that no child who or any of whose issue takes any part of the trust fund under any such appointment as aforesaid shall be entitled to any share of the unappointed part of the trust fund without bringing the share or shares appointed to him or her or to his or her issue into hotchpot and accounting for the same accordingly unless the persons or person making such appointment shall thereby direct the contrary. AND IT IS HEREBY AGREED AND DECLARED that if there shall be no issue of the said intended marriage who being a Son shall attain that age or marry under that age then the said Trustees shall after the death of the said Elizabeth T. Atkins and such default or failure of children as aforesaid which shall last happen stand possessed of the said husband's trust fund and the income thereof in trust for the said Marshall B. Jones absolutely but if the said Marshall B. Jones die before the said Elizabeth T. Atkins then subject and without prejudice to the trusts hereinbefore declared at the death of the said Elizabeth T. Atkins to such person or persons individuals or institutions as the said Marshall B. Jones may by Deed or Will appoint and in default of such appointment in trust for the person or persons who under the statutes for the distribution of effects of intestates would on the death of Marshall B. Jones have been entitled thereto had he died possessed thereof intestate and without having been married. AND IT IS HEREBY AGREED AND DECLARED that if there shall be no issue of the said intended marriage who being a son shall attain the age of twenty-one years or being a daughter shall attain that age or marry under that age then and after the death of the said husband and such default or failure of children as aforesaid which shall last happen the said Trustees shall stand possessed of the said Wife's trust fund and the income thereof in trust for the said Elizabeth T. Atkins absolutely and so that she shall not have power during her now intended coverture to dispose thereof in the way of anticipation but if the said Elizabeth T. Atkins shall die during her now intended coverture then subject and without prejudice to the trusts hereinbefore declared at the death of the said Marshall B. Jones in trust for her brother the said Daniel C. Jones Atkins or (if he shall have predeceased her) for his child or children in equal shares and in default of such child or children then in trust for the person or persons who under the statutes for the distribution of the effects of intestates would on the death of the said Elizabeth T. Atkins have been entitled thereto if she had died possessed thereof intestate and without leaving a husband or issue her surviving such persons if more than one to take as tenants in common in the shares in which the same would have been divisible between them under the same statutes. AND IT IS HEREBY AGREED AND DECLARED that the Trustees may at any time or times with the consent in writing of the said Marshall B. Jones and Elizabeth T. Atkins during their joint lives and the survivor of them during his or her life and after the death of such survivor at the discretion of the Trustees raise any part or parts not exceeding together one moiety of the vested or presumptive share of any child or other issue of the said intended marriage under the trusts or powers aforesaid and may apply the same for his or her advancement or benefit as the Trustees shall think fit. AND IT IS FURTHER UNDERSTOOD AND DIRECTED that all payment to be made by the said Trustees shall neither be anticipated or assigned. If on account of any adverse judgment or decree of Court or on account of insolvency bankruptcy or assignment on the part of any beneficiary under this trust the share of income to which the beneficiary would be entitled under any provision hereof would go to any person or persons other than said beneficiary then the share of said income which would have been received by such beneficiary shall be forfeited by him or by her and shall be retained by said Trustees or their successors in trust during the continuance of said trust and they shall during said time expend for his or her support and that of his or her family such portion of said share of income as they or their successors shall in their discretion see fit. But this shall not in any way affect the distribution of the principal as provided for. AND IT IS HEREBY AGREED AND DECLARED that all money liable to be invested under these presents may be invested in any investment or security for the time being authorized by law as investments for trust money or in any of the bonds or other securities of the United States or in or upon stocks, shares, bonds or securities of any Corporation municipal commercial or otherwise in the United States regularly paying interest or dividends or in mortgages upon improved real estate situated in the states of Wisconsin or Massachusetts or on any real or leasehold securities in England or Wales or in or on any stocks funds or securities of any British Colony or Dependency or in or on the stocks shares or securities of any Public or Private Company carrying on business in the United Kingdom or in any British Colony or Dependency which has paid a Dividend on its Ordinary Stock or shares for three years prior to the date of investment or in or on the stock or securities of any Municipal Corporation local authority or Public Body in the United Kingdom authorized to create stock or to borrow money. AND IT IS HEREBY AGREED AND DECLARED that any Trustee being a solicitor or other person engaged in any profession or business may be so employed and shall be entitled to charge and be paid all proper professional and other charges for any business or act done by him in connection with the trust including any act which a trustee not being a Solicitor or other person engaged as aforesaid could have done personally. AND IT HEREBY AGREED AND DECLARED that the Statutory power of appointing new Trustees shall for the purposes of these presents be vested in the said Marshall B. Jones and Elizabeth T. Atkins during their joint lives and of the survivor of them during his or her life. And that the personal representatives or representative for the time being of a last surviving or continuing Trustee may act as the Trustees or Trustee of these presents until the appointment of a new Trustees or Trustee. whereof the said parties to these presents have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first before written.

Separation Agreement.

Agreement made and entered into this 12th day of December, 1903, between A. B., party of the first part, and C. B., party of the second part, both of the County and State of New York.

WHEREAS, the party of the second part now is and has been for several years past living apart and separate from the party of the first part, who is her husband, and,

WHEREAS, differences have arisen between the parties, by which they hereby agree to and do mutually separate and live apart, and in consideration of the payments to be made, as hereinafter stated, by the party of the first part to the party of the second part, each of the said parties agree that neither of them or either of them will interfere with the rights, privileges, doings or actions of each other and will not interfere in any way, manner or shape with each other, and each of the parties is at liberty to act and do as they see fit.

The party of the first part agrees to pay to the party of the second part the sum of Five Dollars each and every week, which payment is for the support and maintenance of the party of the second part, payments to be made on Friday and Saturday of each week, the money to be sent to the address of the party of the second part by Post Office money order.

The party of the first part also agrees to pay in addition to the Five Dollars weekly the sum of Two Dollars per week on account of the balance due the party of the second part, pursuant to an agreement heretofore made between the parties.

In the event of the party of the second part in any way interfering with the party of the first part, such violation of this agreement shall have the effect of avoiding the obligations assumed by the party of the first part.

In the event of the party of the first part being sick and unable to work so that he will not earn money to make his payments as herein agreed upon, then the party of the first part shall send to the party of the second part a doctor's certificate of such sickness, in which case the payments shall be delayed until the recovery of the party of the first part and payments must be made up for such delay.

In Witness Whereof, the parties have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

Separation Agreement; Trustee Named.

THIS INDENTURE made this 17th day of July, A. D. 1915, by and between George M. Preston, husband of Genevieve Preston of Boston, County of Suffolk, Commonwealth of Massachusetts, party of the first part, hereinafter called the husband; Willard P. Latham, of Everett, in the County of Middlesex, in said Commonwealth, hereinafter called the trustee, party of the second part; and Genevieve Preston, of said Boston, party of the third part, hereinafter called the wife.

WHEREAS there exists strained relations between the husband and the wife, resulting in present domestic friction and unhappiness; and

WHEREAS by reason thereof they are now living separate and apart from each other; and

WHEREAS the said wife is desirous of receiving support from the said husband and the said husband is desirous of providing support of the said wife, and

WHEREAS the party of the second part has agreed to act as trustee for the arrangement by this instrument, and also to enter into covenants, agreements and obligations herein contained.

NOW, THEREFORE, this agreement witnesseth that

First: The husband promises and agrees with the trustee that the wife may live separately and apart from him and be as free from his marital control and authority as though a divorce had been obtained between the parties; that she may reside where she pleases without interference or espionage by him; that he will not molest, interfere with, or seek to control in any way or in any way interest himself in her life, place of dwelling, or mode of living.

Second: The wife covenants and agrees with said trustee in consideration of the covenants herein entered into on the part of the said husband that she will not in any way molest, interfere with, seek to discover, or control, or interest herself in any way or manner in the life, dwelling, home, residence of or manner of living, and that he will be as free from her without interference or espionage as though a divorce had been obtained between the parties and in case the wife violates this covenant and returns to her husband's dwelling, or said husband and wife resume living together, and renew their marital relations, then payments provided for herein shall cease and terminate.

Third: Both husband and wife each severally covenant and agree with said trustee that neither will traduce, malign, libel or slander the other in any way or manner or seek to injure the reputation of the other in the estimation of any person.

Fourth: In consideration of the covenants entered into on the part of the wife and on the part of the trustee, the husband agrees to pay to the trustee the sum of fifty (50) dollars upon the execution of this instrument and the sum of fifty-five (55) dollars every month, the first monthly payment to be made on August 17, 1915, and on the 17th day of each and every month thereafter during the continuance of this agreement. Said payments shall be received by the trustee as a separate estate of the wife, and he shall pay over to her said sums when received, for her own separate use free from the interference and control of any creditors and the same shall not be subject to anticipation, alienation nor subject to attachment or trustee process. Said trustee may, in his discretion, appoint the said wife as his agent to receive and receipt for said payments, and may revoke said appointment at pleasure upon proper and reasonable notice.

Fifth: The said husband hereby further covenants and agrees to surrender or release any and all claims to all furniture or household effects now in the possession of the said wife except a piano, and the wife hereby releases all right, title, and interest thereto, to the said husband in consideration of the premises, and hereby agrees to surrender and deliver the same upon demand to the said husband.

Sixth: The said payments per month shall continue during such time as said husband and wife are living separately and apart from each other, provided that said wife shall well and truly keep and perform her covenants and agreements herein contained, and in case said wife shall fail so to keep and perform her said covenants and agreements then the liability of said husband to make the aforesaid payments to the said trustee hereunder shall cease without notice to the said wife or trustee. The said wife shall not contract any debts for necessities or otherwise for which the said husband shall be charged nor in any way pledge the said husband's credit. The said wife shall not institute any action or civil process or criminal action whatever against the said husband on the ground of non-support or for necessities.

Seventh: The said husband and wife agree that the said trustee shall not be personally liable for any default on the part of either the husband or wife and agree to indemnify and hold him harmless from any personal liability for or on account of any default on the part of either said husband or wife in performance of this agreement.

Eighth: Whenever in this instrument the parties of the first three parts are referred to, it shall be understood that the words heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, are to be read in where the same are appropriate. Should the trustee herein named die, resign, or be for any reason unwilling or unable to execute these trusts, then if the husband and wife or other representative are unable to agree upon his successor, then either party may apply to the Probate Court for the County of Suffolk in said Commonwealth for the appointment of a successor, and upon such agreement or appointment said successor shall be vested with all powers and duties herein imposed upon the trustee.

Ninth. All the foregoing covenants which the husband and wife have made with the trustee are hereby expressly made each with the other in case said covenants and agreements can be enforced by any court at law or in equity or may have validity given to them hereafter by any Act of the Legislature.

Tenth: The trustee above named, or his successor, may take and begin any legal proceedings which shall be necessary and proper to maintain and enforce the rights and obligations of the husband or wife under this indenture upon application by the other for that purpose, being indemnified from any cost or expense by the party making such application and in case the trustee shall for any cause refuse or neglect to take or begin such proceedings, said husband and wife, and each of them, shall have the right to take and begin such proceedings in the name of the said trustee or his successor for the benefit and at the expense of the moving party.

WITNESS our hands and seals the day and year first above written to this and to two other instruments of like tenor.

Post-nuptial Agreement for Reconciliation and Maintenance; That Husband Refrain from Profanity or Drunkenness; Third Party as Mutual Friend.

INDENTURE made this twenty-sixth day of May, A. D., 1910, by and between Martin C. Patton, husband, party of the first part, Adeline T. Patton, his wife, party of the second part, and Andrew Terry, party of the third part, all of Boston in the County of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

WHEREAS, certain unhappy differences have arisen between the said husband and wife by reason whereof they have separated and are now living separate and apart from each other; and

WHEREAS, it is the desire of the said husband and wife for the sake of their children to resume their home life, putting aside past differences and in an endeavor to bring up their children in a proper manner and they have agreed to again live together; and

WHEREAS, the said Andrew Terry has agreed to act as a third party for the purpose of the proper carrying out and enforcement of the arrangements intended to be hereby made;

Now, this INDENTURE WITNESSETH, that in pursuance of the said agreement and in consideration of the premises and of five dollars paid each to the said Terry and by the said Terry to each, the said Martin C. Patton doth hereby, so far as the agreements and the provisions hereinafter contained are to be performed and kept by him, covenant and agree with his said wife, Adeline T. Patton, and also separately with the said Andrew Terry; and in like manner the said wife, Adeline, doth hereby, so far as the agreements and provisions hereinafter contained are to be performed by her, covenant and agree with the said husband, Martin, and also separately with the said Terry; and the said Andrew Terry doth covenant and agree with the said Martin C. Patton and the said Adeline T. Patton and with the each of them separately as follows:

1. The said husband and wife are to immediately resume their marital relations, living together amiably and for the best interests of each and of the said children.

2. The said husband shall make every effort to and shall abstain from the use of intoxicating liquor; he shall also abstain from the use of profane, vulgar or improper language in his home and more especially in the presence of his children;

3. He shall pay to his wife, Adeline, regularly, once each week, the sum of at least nine dollars ($9);

4. And the said Martin C. Patton hereby retracts absolutely the statements which he made in the office of William J. Keith, attorney, attacking the character of his wife, Adeline T. Patton, the said statements having been made in the heat of his excitement, and the said Martin now acknowledges that they were erroneous and not founded on fact:

5. The said husband shall use every effort in his power to make the home life of his wife and children pleasant and agreeable;

6. The said Adeline T. Patton shall use every effort in her power to make the home life of her husband and children pleasant and agreeable; and shall forbear from reference to past differences between herself and her said husband; she shall so far as lies in her power assist her husband, Martin, in carrying out the agreements by him made and hereinbefore contained;

7. It is agreed and understood that the said Andrew Terry shall call at the home of the said Martin and Adeline once each week or as often as necessary and by his advice and suggestion endeavor to assist in the proper carrying out of the letter and spirit of this agreement.

IT IS FURTHER AGREED AND UNDERSTOOD that if the said Martin C. Patton does not keep and perform the stipulations herein contained, then his wife, the said Adeline, shall be free to leave his home taking with her her three children, and the said Martin hereby covenants and agrees with the said Adeline T. Patton and Andrew Terry that in that case he will be liable for her comfortable maintenance and support.

8. The said Andrew agrees that he will make the weekly calls as hereinbefore provided and will use his best endeavors to promote harmony between the parties concerned, but will not exercise undue influence over either of the parties hereto.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the said parties have hereunto interchangeably set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

PLAINTIFF'S DECLARATION.

First Count: And the plaintiff says that on or about the first day of September, A. D. 1914, he was living at Millers Falls in the Town of Montague in said County with Mabel L. Newell, his lawfully wedded wife, and that on or about said first day of September, A. D. 1914, the defendant, unlawfully contriving to injure the plaintiff, did entice and seduce the said Mabel L. Newell, the wife of the plaintiff, and by such enticement and seduction did win the affections of the said Mabel L. Newell and alienate her affections from him the said plaintiff, whereby, and by reason whereof, the plaintiff lost the affection, aid, assistance, comfort and consortium of the said Mabel L. Newell, his wife, and the domestic felicity of himself and the said Mabel L. Newell was thereby broken up and destroyed, and he was otherwise greatly injured and damaged.

Second Count: And the plaintiff says that on or about the first day of September, A. D. 1914, Mabel L. Newell was his lawfully wedded wife, and that the defendant, at said Montague, on or about said first day of September, A. D. 1914, and at divers other times and places since said date, did have unlawful sexual intercourse with said Mabel L. Newell, the defendant's wife, whereby and by reason whereof the plaintiff has lost the affection, aid, assistance, comfort and consortium of his said wife, and has been otherwise greatly injured and damaged.

Complaint; Alienation of Affections.

SUPREME COURT — ALBANY COUNTY.

A. B.,	} Plaintiff,
against
C. B.,
	Defendant.

The plaintiff complains of the defendant and alleges:

FIRST: That on the 30th day of December, 1914, at the City of Albany, N. Y., the plaintiff was married to D. B., each being at the time of said marriage a resident of the said City of Albany, N. Y., and that said D. B. is still the husband of plaintiff.

SECOND: That at the time of said marriage, said D. B. was twenty-one years of age and this plaintiff nineteen years of age.

THIRD: That the only issue of said marriage is a son, E. B., born September 19th, 1916.

FOURTH: That at all times since said marriage, the plaintiff and her said husband, except as hereinafter set forth, have lived and cohabited together as man and wife peacefully, happily and harmoniously and manifested great love and affection each for the other.

FIFTH: That the defendant C. B. is the mother of said D. B. and since said marriage has at all times exercised and exerted influence and control over the mind and the acts of plaintiff's said husband.

SIXTH: That beginning on or about the first day of May, 1915, or shortly thereafter, the defendant manifested a dislike for the plaintiff and an extreme jealousy for the love and affection displayed for the plaintiff by her said husband and at all times thereafter wrongfully and maliciously sought to prejudice the mind of plaintiff's said husband against the plaintiff and to alienate his affection for her and to deprive her of his company, society, aid, protection and support and has ever since sought and endeavored by subtle contrivance, coaxing, threats of disinheritance and withdrawal of financial aid, loss of employment (the plaintiff's said husband being then employed under F. B., the husband of said defendant over whom the defendant at all times exercised complete dominion and control) and by misrepresentation of the plaintiff, to induce and entice plaintiff's said husband to separate himself from the plaintiff and to live separate and apart from her.

That in furtherance of the aforesaid wrongful purposes on the part of the defendant, the said defendant upon numerous occasions during the period aforesaid, the exact dates of which the plaintiff is unable specifically to state, the defendant urged this plaintiff to agree to a separation from plaintiff's said husband and sought particularly to impress upon plaintiff that she avoid bearing children as she would thereby become hopelessly tied to her said husband.

That also in furtherance of said wrongful purpose on the part of the defendant, the said defendant, as plaintiff is informed and verily believes, on or about the 16th day of July, 1915, or shortly prior thereto employed Messrs. A. B. & C., practicing attorneys of this Court, then having offices at Street, in the City of Albany, New York, to take such steps as might be necessary legally to bring about a separation between this plaintiff and her said husband and that in accordance therewith a proposed agreement of separation was prepared by said attorneys on or about the said 16th day of July, 1915, and on the 17th day of July, 1915, the said instrument in writing was presented to this plaintiff for signature without previous notice respecting the employment of said attorneys or of such proposed action; that the plaintiff's said husband then and there stated to plaintiff that the paper amounted to nothing, that he would not give her up nor would he remain apart from her except for a short time and that it was necessary to sign said paper because his parents insisted that it be done at once; that relying upon the said statement that it was necessary that said paper be signed and believing the same to be true, this plaintiff did on the said 17th day of July, 1915, sign the paper or instrument so presented to her as aforesaid, a copy of which said instrument is hereto attached marked "Exhibit A;" that soon thereafter plaintiff went to visit her aunt at New York, but returned to Albany on July 30, 1916, at the request of her said husband who met her upon her return and thereupon they resumed marital relations which continued until on or about the 25th day of August, 1916, when her said husband departed from Albany with a company of the National Guard, of which said Company he was a member, and that upon his return, through and solely by reason and as a result of the aforesaid continuing wrongful acts, influences and contrivances of the said defendant, the plaintiff's said husband abandoned and deserted her and her said child and took up his residence and home with the defendant and has ever since remained separate and apart from her.

SEVENTH: That by reason of the aforesaid wrongful and malicious acts, influence, misrepresentations, threats and contrivances of the defendant, the affections of plaintiff's said husband for her have been alienated and the plaintiff has been and will be wrongfully deprived by the said defendant of the aid, protection, comfort, society and support of her said husband, which she would otherwise have had and enjoyed, and whereby she has suffered damage in the sum of Ten Thousand ($10,000.00) Dollars.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff demands judgment for the sum of Ten Thousand ($10,000.00) Dollars together with the costs of this action.

Answer; Alienation of Affections.

SUPREME COURT — ALBANY COUNTY.

A. B.,	} Plaintiff, against
C. B.,
	Defendant.

The defendant for her answer to the Plaintiff's complaint:

1. Admits the allegations contained in paragraphs numbered "First," "Second" and "Third."

2. Denies the allegations contained in paragraphs numbered "Fourth," "Sixth" and "Seventh," except that defendant admits that the separation agreement mentioned and described in paragraph "Sixth" in the complaint and attached to the complaint, and called "Exhibit A," was made and executed by the plaintiff and D. B. on or about the 16th day of July, 1915.

3. Denies the allegations contained in paragraph "Fifth," except that defendant admits that she is the mother of said D. B.

4. And for a first, separate and distinct defense to the alleged cause of action set forth in the complaint, the defendant alleges that she is the mother of D. B. and that any advice which she may have given to her son, D. B., as to his domestic affairs, was given in good faith, without malice, and with a sincere desire to promote the welfare and happiness of the plaintiff and the said D. B., and that said advice is and was privileged.

5. And for a further, second, separate, distinct and partial defense to the alleged cause of action, set forth in the complaint, and in mitigation of any damages to which the plaintiff might otherwise be entitled, the defendant alleges that in good faith, and with a sincere desire to promote the welfare and happiness of the plaintiff and D. B., the defendant furnished the plaintiff and the said D. B., with food, lodging and funds; that she also introduced the plaintiff to her friends and acquaintances, and endeavored in every way to promote the comfort and happiness of the plaintiff, but that the plaintiff many times during her stay with the defendant, at defendant's home, exhibited a petty, jealous and mean disposition, and ungovernable temper and a habit of nagging, especially toward D. B., all of which the defendant overlooked and ignored, and that when the said D. B. complained to defendant in relation to the same, she, the defendant, always advised him to overlook the same and endeavor to live quietly and happily with the plaintiff.

6. And for a further, separate and distinct defense to the alleged cause of action set forth in the complaint, the defendant alleges that if the affections of D. B. have been alienated from plaintiff, or if said D. B. has been separated from the plaintiff, the same was caused solely and proximately by reason of the acts and conduct of the plaintiff and not by reason of any act or thing on the part of this defendant.

7. And for a further separate, distinct and partial defense to the alleged cause of action set forth in the complaint, and in mitigation of any damages to which the plaintiff might otherwise be entitled, the defendant alleges that D. B. is now employed by the State of New York and lives with and supports the plaintiff and the child of plaintiff and said D. B.

8. And for a further separate, distinct and partial defense to the alleged cause of action, set forth in the complaint, and in mitigation of any damages to which the plaintiff might otherwise be entitled, the defendant alleges, upon information and belief, that on or about the 16th day of July, 1916, the plaintiff and said D. B. duly made and entered into the separation agreement attached to the complaint hereto, and marked "Exhibit A."

WHEREFORE, defendant demands judgment that the complaint herein be dismissed with costs.

Complaint; Breach of Promise.

SUPREME COURT — ALBANY COUNTY.

A. B., an Infant, by D. E., her Guardian ad litem, Plaintiff, against B. C., Defendant.	}
---	---

The infant plaintiff by D. E., her guardian ad litem, complains of the defendant and alleges:

FIRST

That the plaintiff, A. B., is a minor over the age of fourteen years, and is a resident of Albany County, New York. That D. E., the mother of said infant plaintiff, was by order of Hon. Charles C. Van Kirk, Justice of the Supreme Court, dated December 28th, 1908, and entered in the office of the Clerk of Albany County, N. Y., January 7th, 1909, duly appointed guardian ad litem of said infant plaintiff to prosecute this action.

SECOND

Upon information and belief, that in or about the month of January, 1908, the infant plaintiff and defendant, both being unmarried, in consideration that the infant plaintiff would marry the defendant, he, the said defendant, promised and agreed to marry the infant plaintiff, and said plaintiff and said defendant then became and were duly engaged to each other to be married, the said marriage to take place within a reasonable time.

THIRD

Upon information and belief, that the infant plaintiff confiding in the said promises of the defendant so made as aforesaid, entered into relations with the said defendant, which said relations continued for several weeks, by reason of which relations, said infant did subsequently and upon the 14th day of October, 1908, become delivered of a child of which this defendant is the father.

FOURTH

That the infant plaintiff confiding in said promises so made by defendant, has always remained and now is ready and willing to marry defendant and has frequently offered so to do, but the defendant has always refused and still refuses to marry this infant plaintiff, in accordance with the said promises and agreement.

FIFTH

That at the time of infant plaintiff's and defendant's engagement as aforesaid, she, the said infant plaintiff, was engaged as a stenographer in the city of Albany, and had been for a long period of time prior thereto, and that on account of her engagement and of her condition brought about by the relations aforesaid, she was compelled to and did give up her position as such stenographer, and spent and devoted a great deal of time and money in and about the preparation for said marriage, and in and about her sickness and confinement, all of which defendant well knew, and said infant plaintiff became an object of scorn and ridicule to her relatives, friends and other acquaintances, and was, and is unable to procure further employment by reason of the birth of said child, and has suffered great damage to her health and reputation, in all amounting to the sum of Twenty Thousand Dollars ($20,000).

Wherefore, infant plaintiff demands judgment against the defendant for the sum of Twenty Thousand Dollars, besides the cost of this action.

Answer; Breach of Promise; Defence of Unchastity.

TITLE.

The defendant above named for answer to the complaint herein.

FIRST: For a first defense:

1. Denies any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to whether any allegation set forth in the first paragraph or subdivision of the complaint is true.

2. Denies the second, third and fourth paragraphs or subdivisions of the complaint and each and every allegation therein contained except that in the month of January, 1908, and at all the times mentioned in the complaint, the plaintiff and defendant were each unmarried.

3. Denies the fifth paragraph or subdivision of the complaint and each and every allegation therein contained except that at all the times mentioned in the complaint the plaintiff was a stenographer engaged as such in the city of Albany.

SECOND: For a second and further defense, defendant alleges:

1. Upon information and belief, that prior to the times mentioned in the complaint and prior to the alleged promise of defendant to marry the plaintiff, the plaintiff was unchaste and had had sexual intercourse with divers men other than the defendant and had had sexual intercourse with them prior and subsequent to and during the month of January, 1908, and that plaintiff's alleged pregnancy, if any there was, was the result of such sexual intercourse and that the defendant subsequently learned that the plaintiff was unchaste and had had sexual intercourse prior and subsequent to January 1st, 1908, with divers men other than the defendant and that defendant thereby became absolved from the alleged promise to marry the plaintiff, if any there was.

TITLE.

The plaintiff complains of the defendant and alleges:

I. That at all the times herein mentioned the plaintiff and C. B. were husband and wife, having been married on the day of, 19.., living together at, N. Y.

II. That the defendant contriving and wrongfully, wickedly and unjustly intending to injure the plaintiff and to deprive him of the comfort, fellowship, society, aid and assistance of C. B., the wife of plaintiff, and to alienate and destroy her affection for the plaintiff, heretofore, to wit: on the day of, 19.., at, N. Y., and on divers other days, times and places before the commencement of this action, and without the privity or connivance of plaintiff, wrongfully, wickedly and unjustly debauched and carnally knew the said C. B., she at the time being the wife of plaintiff, and known to defendant to be the wife of plaintiff.

III. That in consequence and by reason of said criminal relations the affection of the said C. B. for the plaintiff was then and there alienated and destroyed, and also by reason of the premises the plaintiff has lost and been deprived of the comfort, fellowship, society, aid and assistance of the said C. B., his said wife, in his domestic affairs, which the plaintiff during all that time ought to have had and otherwise might and would have had, and that plaintiff has suffered thereby great distress of body and mind, all to the damage of the plaintiff Five thousand Dollars ($5,000.00).

WHEREFORE, plaintiff demands judgment against the defendant for the sum of Five thousand Dollars ($5,000.00), together with the costs of this action.

Petition to Annul Marriage; Marriage Procured by Fraud.

To the Honorable Justices of the Superior Court, holden at Springfield within and for the County of Hampden.

Respectfully libels, and represents William Allen, of Holyoke, in the County of Hampden, and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, that he was legally married to Elsie Allen formerly Elsie Towne of said Holyoke, now of parts unknown, at said Holyoke, on the sixteenth day of October, A. D. 1913.

That said marriage was never consummated by assuming the duties of the marriage relations, and that they never lived together as husband and wife after the performing of said marriage; that on the day and date of said marriage, the libellee without cause, deserted your libellant and that such desertion was a part of a pre-conceived plan formed by the libellee prior to her marriage with the libellant never to live with him as his wife and assume her marriage duties with your libellant. That your libellant was induced to make said marriage contract, and to have the marriage performed upon the false, deceitful and fraudulent statements and promises made to him by the libellee that she would fulfil all her marriage vows and obligations to the libellant, all of which statements and promises the libellee knew to be false and untrue. That at the time of making said contract and at the time of said marriage the libellee knew that she would not live with him as his wife and deceived him, all of which was unknown to the libellant before said marriage was performed. That the libellant without his knowledge as to the deceit and fraud practiced on him by the libellee made said contract of marriage with her, and that the libellee deceitfully concealed from your libellant that she would never live with him as his wife and that she would never fulfil her marriage vows and obligations as made with him.

That your libellant was always willing to carry out his agreement and to comply with his marriage duties and obligations and gave no cause for the libellee to refuse to fulfil her duties and obligations as is required by the marriage vows and obligations.

That because of the deceit and fraud practiced upon him by the libellee, the libellant was led into a marriage contract and having the same performed according to the laws of the Commonwealth; and because of said deceit practiced upon the libellant by the libellee said marriage is null and void.

Wherefore, your libellant prays that said marriage of the libellee to your libellant may be decreed null and void, and for such further orders and decrees in the premises as to law and justice may appertain.

Dated the eighteenth day of October, 1913.

WILLIAM ALLEN.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

NORFOLK, SS.

SUPERIOR COURT.

To the Honorable the Justices of the Superior Court to be holden at Dedham within and for the County of Norfolk:

Respectfully libels and represents Henry Willett Sawyer, a minor, who bring this libel by his next friend, Charles R. Sawyer, his father, that he was born in Quincy in said County of Norfolk on the tenth day of March, A. D. 1895, and continuously since that day unto and including the day of the filing of this libel, has had his domicile in said Quincy; that on the twentieth day of December, A. D. 1913, at the town of Rockingham in the County of Windham and state of Vermont, he was married to Margaret Veronica Haskell, a woman then of the age of twenty-one years, then and now of Williamstown in the county of Berkshire and Commonwealth of Massachusetts; that the said marriage of your libellant to the said Margaret was without the consent of your libellant's said father, who then had the lawful control of your libellant; that your libellant was induced, by the fraud of the said Margaret, to contract the said marriage; that your libellant and the said Margaret have never lived together as husband and wife; that the said Margaret, at the time of said marriage, was pregnant with a child by some man other than your libellant, all of which the said Margaret then well knew; that the said Margaret knowingly did falsely pretend, represent and insist to your libellant that your libellant was the father of said child and was therefore bound to marry her, the said Margaret; that, previous to said marriage and for a long time thereafter, your libellant was ignorant of the laws of nature governing the reproductive functions of the human species, particularly as to the normal period of gestation, all of which ignorance on the part of your libellant the said Margaret then well knew; that the said Margaret, for a long time before said marriage, being as aforesaid with child by some man other than your libellant, wickedly and corruptly plotted and schemed to contract a marriage before that she would be delivered of the said child, and to that end, relying upon your libellant's said ignorance of the laws of nature, and designing and intending wickedly and corruptly to take advantage of said ignorance, as a part of and in pursuance of her wicked and corrupt plots and schemes, with great urgency and insistence, repeatedly knowingly did falsely pretend and represent to your libellant that your libellant was the father of said unborn child and did beget her with said child on or subsequent to the seventeenth day of July, A. D. 1913, and was therefore bound to marry her, the said Margaret; and during all said time, to and including the said twentieth day of December the said Margaret, well knowing her said pretensions and representations to be false, repeatedly and insistently urged your libellant, because of her said representations and pretensions, to marry her, the said Margaret; that your libellant, because of his said ignorance of the laws of nature and because he did not know that a lapse of time would prove the truth or falsity of said Margaret's said representations, was deceived by the said false representations and believed them to be true, and believed that he was the father of the said unborn child, and believed that he was, therefore, bound to marry the said Margaret; that your libellant, relying upon the said false representations of the said Margaret and, so as aforesaid because of his said ignorance, believing them to be true, at the insistence of the said Margaret and because of his reliance and belief, married her, the said Margaret, as hereinbefore set forth; that on the eighth day of February, A. D. 1914, the said Margaret was delivered of a fully matured male child, being the child with which she had theretofore been pregnant by some man other than your libellant as hereinbefore set forth, which said child the said Margaret knowingly falsely pretended and represented to be your libellant's child and that your libellant had begotten her with said child on or subsequent to the seven-teenth day of July, A. D. 1913, and your libellant, still being ignorant as aforesaid of the said laws of nature, believed the false pretensions and representations, that he was the father of said child, to be true and that he was in fact the father of said child; that, subsequent to the said eighth day of February, your libellant, from the instructions of his said father and by the reading of medical authorities, first learned of the laws of nature governing the reproductive functions and relating to the period of gestation and thereby that the said representations, so as aforesaid made to your libellant, were false and that he was not the father of said child; that your libellant doubts the validity of his said marriage to the said Margaret and prays that the said marriage be annulled.

Complaint; Action to Annul Marriage Because One of Parties Had Not Attained Age of Consent.

SUPREME COURT — COUNTY OF

A. B., through C. D., her Guardian ad litem, Plaintiff, against

C. B., Defendant.

The plaintiff for a cause of action herein alleges:

I. That the plaintiff herein is an infant of less than the age of twenty-one years, having been born on the day of, 18..; and that on the day of, 19.., upon application duly made as provided by law, C. D. was appointed by the Hon. James Brant, a justice of the Supreme Court [or by Hon. James Brant, county judge of county], by an order which has been duly entered in the office of the Clerk of the County of, on the day of, 19.., as guardian ad litem for such plaintiff for the purposes of this action.

II. That the plaintiff and the defendant were married on the day of, 19.., at, county of, State of New York; and that at such times, and at all times since that time, such parties were and have been residents of such State.

III. That at the time the plaintiff and the defendant were so married, the plaintiff was not of the age of eighteen years, having been born on the day of, 18..

IV. That such marriage has not been ratified by any mutual assent of the parties after the plaintiff herein attained the age of eighteen years, nor since such time has the plaintiff for any time freely cohabited with the defendant as husband [or wife].

Wherefore, the plaintiff herein prays that a judgment be had declaring such marriage contract void, and annulling such marriage, and for such other and further relief as may be just, with the costs of this action.

Complaint; Action to Annul Marriage on Ground that Former Husband or Wife Is Living.

(Title of action.)

The plaintiff for a cause of action herein alleges:

I. That the above-named plaintiff and defendant were married at the city [or village] of, county of, State of New York, on the day of, 19..; and that at such time the said plaintiff and defendant were residents of the State of New York, and that the plaintiff is now a resident of, county of, State of New York.

II. That the said plaintiff and defendant lived together as husband and wife from the time of said marriage until on or about the day of, 19..

III. That at the time of said marriage the said defendant was the husband [or wife] of one L. M., who was then living; that the said defendant and the said L. M. were married at, county of, State of, on the day of, 18..

and at the time of the marriage of the above-named plaintiff and defendant the said marriage of the said defendant with the said L. M. was and still is in full force and effect.

IV. That when the marriage of the said plaintiff and defendant herein was contracted, plaintiff contracted the same in good faith and fully believed that L. M., the former husband [or wife] of the said defendant was dead [or that the marriage between the said L. M. and the defendant had been dissolved; or if the former marriage of the defendant was unknown to the plaintiff, such fact should be stated; or if for any other reason the plaintiff supposed that the defendant was qualified to enter into the contract of marriage, it should be so stated in detail].

V. That, the issue [if any] of the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant herein is, one child, L. B., a boy [or girl] who was born, on the day of, 19.., and that such child is now living.

Wherefore, the plaintiff prays that the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant herein be annulled and declared void, and that it be adjudged that the said L. B., the issue of the marriage between the said plaintiff and the defendant be for all purposes the legitimate child of the plaintiff and be entitled to succeed as such, in the same manner as other legitimate children, to the real and personal estate of the said plaintiff, and that the said plaintiff be awarded the care and custody of said child, and for such other and further relief as may be just and proper, with the costs of this action.

Complaint; Action to Annul Marriage on Ground of Lunacy.

(Title of action.)

The plaintiff for a cause of action herein alleges:

I. [State allegation of marriage and residence as in preceding form.]

II. That at the time such marriage was contracted the plaintiff was a lunatic, and as such lunatic was incapable of contracting such marriage.

III. That the plaintiff remained a lunatic until about the day of, 19.., when he was restored to a sound mind, and has since that time ever been of a sound mind.

IV. That the said plaintiff and the defendant herein have not freely cohabited as husband and wife since the said plaintiff was so restored to sound mind.

V. [Allege as to whether or not children have been born as the issue of such marriage.]

Wherefore, the plaintiff prays that a judgment be had annulling such marriage and declaring such marriage contract void; [in case of children having been born of such marriage, judgment should be prayed in the same manner prescribed in the preceding form] and such other and further relief as may be just and proper, with the costs of this action.

Complaint; Action to Annul Marriage for Force or Duress.

(Title of action.)

The plaintiff for a cause of action herein alleges:

I. [Allege marriage and residence as in Form No. 26.]

II. That the consent of the plaintiff to said marriage was obtained by force and duress, and that the plaintiff was made to believe that if he did not marry the said defendant the brother of said defendant would shoot and kill him, the said plaintiff, and that serious violence would be committed upon him by defendant's father, and the said defendant's brother threatened to kill said plaintiff if he did not marry the defendant, which threats were made with the knowledge and concurrence of the defendant; that in the fear that said threats would be carried out and that plaintiff would be killed or grievously wounded and hurt if he did not the said plaintiff married the defendant to avoid such hurt or death.

III. That the said plaintiff and defendant have never since such marriage cohabited together as husband and wife.

Wherefore the plaintiff demands judgment that the aforesaid marriage be annulled and declared void, and that each of the parties be freed from the obligations thereof, and for such other relief as may be necessary, with the costs of this action.

Decision After Trial; Annulment of Marriage.

At a Trial Term of the Supreme Court, State of New York, held in and for the Third Judicial District at the County Court House in the City of Albany, New York, on the 14th day of February, 1920.

Present: HON. HAROLD J. HINMAN, Justice Presiding.

A. B.,	}
Plaintiff,
against
C. B.,
	Defendant.

This action having regularly come on to be heard before Hon. Harold J. Hinman, one of the Justices of this Court, without a jury, at a Trial Term of this Court, held on the 14th day of February, 1920, and the allegations and proofs of the parties having been heard, and the plaintiff having appeared by X. Y., his attorney, and the defendant having appeared by W. Z., her attorney, and due deliberation having been had, I find and decide as follows:

FINDINGS OF FACT.

I. That the plaintiff and defendant were married at the City of Albany, New York, on the 24th day of August, 1904, and lived and cohabited together as husband and wife until on or about September 1, 1904.

II. That the defendant above named was, prior to said marriage, to wit, on the 1st day of July, 1899, married to one E. F., and that at the time of the marriage of the above-named plaintiff and defendant, the said marriage of the said defendant with the said E. F. was in full force and effect.

III. That the issue of the marriage between the plaintiff and defendant was a son, D. B., who was born on the 1st day of June, 1905.

IV. That the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant was contracted by the plaintiff in good faith and without any knowledge on the part of the plaintiff of the former marriage of the defendant with the said E. F.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

I. That the plaintiff is entitled to final judgment, unless the court shall otherwise order in the meantime, three months after the filing of the decision herein and the entry of interlocutory judgment, annulling the marriage contracted between the plaintiff, A. B., and the defendant, C. B., which was solemnized on the 24th day of August, 1904, on the ground that the former wife of defendant is living and his former marriage being in force; and, unless otherwise ordered, the plaintiff is hereby required to enter final judgment.

II. That the said D. B., the issue of the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant, shall be deemed the legitimate child of the plaintiff A. B.

III. That the plaintiff be awarded costs to be taxed, but the judgment therefor shall not be enforceable by execution or punishment until final judgment herein.

I direct interlocutory judgment accordingly.

Complaint; Action for Divorce.

(Title of action.)

The plaintiff, for a cause of action herein, alleges:

I. That the plaintiff and the defendant were married on the day of, 19.., at the city of, county of, State of New York.

II. (Allege in case parties were not married within the State:) That the above-named plaintiff and defendant are now and have been since such marriage residents of the city of, county of, State of New York (or state such other jurisdictional matters as are required by section 1756 of the Code of Civil Procedure).

III. That, upon information and belief, since the date of said marriage, and on or about the day of, 19.., at, in the city of, county of, State of (here definitely state time and place of alleged adultery), the defendant committed adultery with (stating name of person with whom adultery was committed).

(If the name of the person with whom the adultery was committed is unknown, the allegation may be as follows: That on or about the day of, 19.., at, in the city of, county of, State of, the defendant committed adultery with a woman whose name is unknown to the plaintiff.)

IV. That at divers places within the city of, county of, State of, and at various times between the day of, 19.., and at the time of bringing this action, at what particular times and places plaintiff is unable to state, the defendant has committed adultery with one A. B. (or with divers persons to the plaintiff unknown).

V. That such adultery was committed without the consent, connivance, privity or procurement of the plaintiff.

VI. That five years have not elapsed since the discovery by the plaintiff of the fact that such adultery had been committed by the defendant, and that the plaintiff has not voluntarily cohabited with the defendant since such discovery (and also where at the time of the offense charged the defendant was living in adulterous intercourse with the person whom the offense is alleged to have been committed, it should be alleged that five years have not elapsed since the commencement of such adulterous intercourse was discovered by the plaintiff.)

VII. That the plaintiff has not forgiven or condoned such adultery, and that no action for a divorce has been brought by the defendant against this plaintiff, nor has a judgment or decree in such an action ever been obtained in any court of any state, territory or foreign country.

VIII. That the plaintiff is not possessed of any real or personal property in her own name, and that she has no means of livelihood except such as are afforded her by the above-named defendant; that the defendant is seized and possessed of real and personal property to the value of dollars; that he is engaged in the business of (state nature of business or employment), and that his annual income is at least the sum or dollars.

IX. That the following children have been born of the marriage between the above-named plaintiff and defendant: (State names of children and dates of birth.)

Wherefore the plaintiff prays judgment divorcing the said plaintiff and defendant, and that their marriage be dissolved; that the plaintiff be awarded the care and custody of the above-named children; that the defendant be required to make suitable provisions for the support, maintenance and education of such children and for the support of this plaintiff, and that the plaintiff have temporary alimony; and for such other and further relief as may be just and proper, with the costs of this action.

I. Denies the allegations of paragraphs marked "III," "IV" and "V" (and any other allegations controverted) of the complaint.

II. And for a further and separate defense to the alleged cause of action set forth in the plaintiff's complaint, the defendant alleges that the adultery charged in the complaint and alleged to have been committed by defendant with A. B., on or about the day of, 19.., was committed by the procurement and with the connivance of the plaintiff as follows, to wit: (here set forth the facts)

III. And for a further and separate defense to the alleged cause of action set forth in the plaintiff's complaint, the defendant alleges that prior to the commencement of this action the adultery alleged to have been committed by the defendant with A. B., on the day of, 19.., was discovered by the plaintiff, such discovery having been made on or about the day of, 19.., and that the plaintiff knowing the same to have been committed, forgave the defendant and thereupon voluntarily cohabited with the defendant as his wife, and resided and lived with him at Street, in the City of, N. Y., and that the plaintiff did so live and cohabit with the defendant as his wife from the day of, 19.., to the day of, 19.. (or set forth facts showing forgiveness by the plaintiff affirmatively).

IV. And for a further and separate defense to the alleged cause of action set forth in the plaintiff's complaint, the defendant alleges that on or about the day of, 19.., and more than five years prior to the commencement of this action, the adultery alleged to have been committed by the defendant with A. B. on the day of, 19.., was discovered by the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff then knew and ever since has known that said adultery was committed by the defendant.

V. And for a further and separate defense to the alleged cause of action set forth in the plaintiff's complaint, the defendant alleges that on or about the day of, 19.., at the Hotel in the City of Albany, N. Y., the plaintiff committed adultery with one C. D.; that said adultery was committed without the consent, connivance, privity or procurement of the defendant; that five years have not elapsed since the discovery of the fact by defendant that such adultery had been committed, and that the defendant has not voluntarily cohabited with the plaintiff since the commission of said act of adultery, and the discovery thereof by defendant; that there is not now pending in any court of competent jurisdiction any action between the parties hereto, other than this action, for a divorce upon the ground of adultery or any other ground, nor has any decree been granted by any court of competent jurisdiction in such an action.

VI. And for a counterclaim to the alleged cause of action set forth in plaintiff's complaint, the defendant alleges: (here set forth all the facts necessary to be alleged in a complaint for a divorce as in Form No. 39.)

WHEREFORE, the defendant demands judgment in his favor, dissolving the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant and divorcing plaintiff and the defendant, together with the costs of this action.

No. 49.Referee's Report.

(Title)

TO THE SUPREME COURT:

The undersigned was heretofore appointed referee herein, pursuant to an Order entered herein on September 24, 1917, with the following instructions:

ORDERED, that the issues in the above entitled action be referred to Alvah E. Burlingame, Jr., Esq., of the County of Kings, to take the proofs offered by the respective parties, and to report with the testimony and his opinion thereon to this court, with all convenient speed; and it is further ORDERED, that said referee inquire into the situation and value of the property and income of the defendant, and as to what would be a reasonable and proper sum to be allowed to the plaintiff for alimony and for her support and maintenance during her life, and for the support and maintenance and the education of her children, F. B. and G. B., until they shall have arrived at the age of twenty-one years respectively; and it is further

ORDERED, that said referee inquire and report in regard to the ages and circumstances of said children, and as to who would be the proper person to take the care and custody of such children, with such other facts in regard thereto as the parties claiming the custody of said children shall bring before the said referee and as to him shall seem pertinent and proper.

The Referee respectfully reports as follows:

Before proceeding with the matter I took the oath required by law.

The matter was duly brought on before me for a hearing; that the plaintiff, A. B., appeared before me in person, also her counsel, C. D. The defendant, C. B., appeared before me in person, also his counsel, L. D.

That I have heard all the allegations of the parties and have taken and reduced to writing the testimony offered by them, which testimony and my oath are filed with this report, together with certain exhibits offered and received in evidence, and after due deliberation thereon, I find as matters of fact and conclusions of law, as follows:

FACTS.

FIRST.—That on the 9th day of July, 1900, the parties intermarried at the City of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, and thereafter and until June, 1909, the parties lived together as husband and wife, and that during said time they had two children, namely: F. B., a daughter, born April 26th, 1902, and G. B., a son, born July 24th, 1903. That the plaintiff separated from her husband in 1909.

SECOND.—That the plaintiff and defendant are both residents of this State, to wit: The plaintiff residing in Kings County and the defendant residing in New York County, and the parties at the time of the commission of the adultery hereinafter mentioned, and at the time of the commencement of this action were and still are residents and inhabitants of this State.

THIRD.—That the defendant, C. B., during or about the month of June, 1914, on three occasions committed adultery with one known as X. Y., sometimes known as "Bessie," at _____, New York City.

FOURTH.—That the said adultery so as aforesaid committed by defendant, was without the consent, connivance, privity or procurement of the plaintiff and that five years have not elapsed since said plaintiff discovered the commission of said adultery by defendant, and that since the discovery thereof she has not voluntarily cohabited with said defendant, nor has plaintiff forgiven the same.

FIFTH.—That there is no judgment or decree in any court of the State of competent jurisdiction against the plaintiff in favor of the defendant for a divorce on the ground of adultery, and that there is no judgment or decree of absolute divorce between the parties hereto rendered by any court, having jurisdiction to grant the same, in any State, Territory or dependency of the United States, or in any foreign country.

SIXTH.—That the defendant is employed by W. & L., stockbrokers, at _____, New York City, as Manager, at a salary of Five thousand 00/100 ($5,000.00) Dollars a year, which is his only source of income.

SEVENTH.—That the situation in respect to the children is as follows: F. B., the daughter, was seventeen years old in April, 1919, and G. B., the son, will be sixteen years of age in June, 1919. That the daughter lives with her aunt, A. H., at Trenton, New Jersey, wife of D. H. Mrs. H. is the sister of the defendant. That F. B. has attended the _____ School at Newton, Pa., for two years, and on finishing another two years is expected to enter Vassar College. That the defendant pays his daughter's tuition and maintenance, amounting to more than Five hundred ($500.00) Dollars; furnishes the girl her clothes and spending money, amounting in all to a sum estimated at Eight hundred ($800.00) Dollars a year, etc.

The son has been in the care of his uncle, etc.

That it will be for the best interests of the children not to interfere with the provisions already made for their support and education, they having been apart from the mother as heretofore indicated for ten years and upward. The plaintiff, the mother of the children, is satisfied with the present arrangement except that she requests the custody of the children.

The Referee finds as Conclusions of Law:

FIRST.—That a divorce should be decreed in favor of the plaintiff, A. B., and against the defendant, C. B., on the ground of his said adultery.

SECOND.—That the custody of F. B., age seventeen years, should be awarded to her aunt, Mrs. H., and the custody of G. B., age fifteen years, should be awarded to his uncle, W. X., and that the judgment should provide that the plaintiff and defendant be entitled to see their children at all suitable times.

THIRD.—That the defendant pay all of the expenses for the support and education of his respective children.

FOURTH.—That the defendant should pay the plaintiff the sum of Twelve hundred 00/100 ($1,200.00) Dollars per year for her own support.

FIFTH.—That there is no evidence before the Referee of the amount of counsel fee awarded in this action and the question of costs is respectfully submitted to the Court.

Dated, May 22nd, 1919.

Interlocutory Judgment on Referee's Report.

(Caption and Title)

This cause coming on regularly to be heard before me, the undersigned, one of the Justices of this Court, at a Special Term, Part I thereof, on the eleventh day of July, 1919, upon the order herein, entered the twenty-fourth day of September, 1917, and the report of Alvah H. Burlingame, Jr., Esq., the referee thereby appointed, which was filed the ninth day of June, 1919, and satisfactory evidence having been produced to the Court on the part of the plaintiff, proving the material allegations of the complaint, and showing also that there is no judgment or decree of any court of the State of competent jurisdiction against plaintiff in favor of the defendant for a divorce upon the ground of adultery; and on reading and filing the notice of motion herein, dated July 3, 1919, and the affidavit of C. D., verified July 3, 1919, on behalf of the plaintiff, and the affidavit of L. D., verified July 10, 1919, on behalf of the defendant; and after hearing C. D., Esq., for the plaintiff, and L. D., Esq., for the defendant, the Court, after due deliberation, having granted this application and made its decision thereon;

Now, on motion of C. D., attorney for the plaintiff, it is ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED, that said application to confirm said report and for judgment thereon be and the same hereby is granted in all respects, and the finding of fact and conclusions of law of the said referee, contained in said report, hereby are made the findings and decisions of the Court, and it is further ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED, that, unless the Court shall otherwise order in the meantime, there shall be entered in this action, three months after the filing of the decision herein, and entry of this interlocutory judgment a final judgment for an absolute divorce in favor of the plaintiff, H. B., and against the defendant, C. B., by reason of the adultery of the defendant and as prayed for in the complaint herein; and it is further

ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED, that this judgment is interlocutory only and ineffectual to dissolve the marriage relations existing between the parties hereto, and it is further

ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED, that the custody of F. B., one of the children of said marriage, is hereby awarded to her aunt, A. H., and the custody of G. B., the other of said children, is hereby awarded to his uncle, P. B., and that both the plaintiff and defendant be permitted to see said children at all suitable times, and that the defendant shall pay all of the expenses for the support and education of said children; and it is further

ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED, that the said defendant pay to the said plaintiff the sum of twelve hundred dollars per annum, from the date of this judgment, in equal monthly payments of one hundred dollars per month in advance, for the support and maintenance of said plaintiff during her natural life; and it is further ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED, that the defendant pay to the plaintiff or to her attorney the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars as and for an extra allowance of costs and counsel fee herein.

Curry, now of Poughkeepsie, in the State of New York, at Boston, the first day of June, A. D. 1898, and thereafterwards your Libellant and the said Frederick H. Curry lived together as husband and wife in this Commonwealth, to wit: at Belmont, in the County of Middlesex, and that two children, to wit, Earl V. Curry, six years old, and Mildred Curry, three years old, have been born of said marriage; that your Libellant has always been faithful to her marriage vows and obligations, but the said Frederick H. Curry, being wholly regardless of the same at divers times and places since the said date of their marriage up to December, 1904, committed the crime of adultery with persons to your Libellant unknown.

Wherefore, your Libellant prays that a divorce from the bonds of matrimony may be decreed between your Libellant and the said Frederick H. Curry, and that the care and custody of said children be committed to her, and that in order to secure a suitable support and maintenance to your Libellant and such children as may be committed to her care and custody, said libellee be ordered to pay over to her such sums of money as the Court may deem proper, and that he be ordered to pay over to her a suitable sum in order to enable her to maintain her libel.

Dated the eighth day of June, A. D. 1905.

No. 59.Libel; Desertion as Ground.

To the Honorable the Justices of the Superior Court:

Respectfully shows Francis X. Leighton, of St. Lambert, in the County of Chambly and Province of Quebec, that he was lawfully married to Mary H. Leighton, before marriage Mary H. Mahoney, of Milford, in the County of Worcester and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, at said Milford, on October 30, A. D. 1901; that they have since lived together as husband and wife in Boston, in the County of Suffolk, and in Cambridge, in the County of Middlesex, both in said Commonwealth; that your Libellant has always been faithful to her marriage vows and obligations, yet the said Mary H. Leighton, being wholly regardless of the same at said Milford, in the month of March, A. D. 1906, utterly deserted him and has continued such desertion from that time to the date hereof, being more than three consecutive years next prior to the filing of this libel.

Wherefore, your Libellant prays that a divorce from the bond of matrimony may be decreed between your Libellant and the said Mary H. Leighton, and for such further orders and decrees in the premises as to law and justice may appertain.

Dated this tenth day of February, A. D. 1911.

Plea to the Jurisdiction.

Now comes the defendant, and, relying on the special appearance filed in his behalf, and without waiving the same and without submitting himself in any way to the jurisdiction of this court, says that the court has no jurisdiction of him in the matter of the said libel for divorce.

Wherefore, said libel should be dismissed as against him.

DIVORCE SESSION.

Jennie E. Cashman,

against

Lewis N. Cashman.

Now comes the Libellee in the above entitled action and for answer denies each and every item, allegation and particular contained in the libel filed therein.

And for further answer the Libellee says that prior to the date of the alleged events set forth in said libel the Libellant had utterly deserted him, and that said desertion had continued for more than three consecutive years next prior to the filing of said libel.

LEWIS N. CASHMAN.

(Taken from Cushman v. Cushman, 194 Mass. 38.)

No. 63.

Answer; Connivance Plead.

Now comes the Libellee in the above entitled action and admits that she was married to the Libellant at Cambridge on January 1, 1909; that she and the Libellant afterwards lived together at Weymouth in this Commonwealth; that two children were born of said marriage.

And further answering the Libellee denies that she committed the crime of adultery with Rollin Dawson on October 20, 1916, or at any other time.

And further answering the Libellee says that if it shall appear that she and the said Rollin Dawson were together on October 20, 1916, under circumstances from which it might be inferred that she had committed adultery with the said Rollin Dawson, that she was with said Dawson by reason of the connivance and procurement of the Libellant.

And further answering the Libellee says that the Libellant entered into a conspiracy with the said Dawson and others to so arrange matters that she and the said Dawson might be found together under such compromising circumstances as to entitle the Libellant to obtain a divorce from her on the ground of adultery; that in pursuance of said conspiracy the said Dawson, by the procurement of the Libellant, induced the Libellee to go with him to a room in the Hotel Essex in Boston on or about October 20, 1916, where she was found by her husband and others who were parties to said conspiracy.

And further answering the Libellee denies that anything improper took place between her and the said Dawson, as alleged in said libel.

WHEREFORE she prays that said libel be dismissed.

GLADYS E. LINDSEY.

(Taken from Leavitt v. Leavitt, 229 Mass. 196.)

No. 64.

Answer; Condonation, Connivance and Recrimination Plead.

The libellee admits that the libellant was lawfully married to her at Georgetown in said County on the 24th day of April, A. D. 1901, and that thereafter, to wit, from that date until the 5th day of November, 1904, the libellant and libellee lived together as husband and wife at West Newbury in said County.

Further answering said libel the libellee denies each and every allegation therein contained, excepting those which are herein expressly admitted.

Further answering the libellee says that if she committed all or any of the acts of adultery alleged in said libel, which she denies, that after the times mentioned in said libel and before the commencement of this suit the libellant being fully informed as to all or any of said alleged acts freely condoned the same and forgave the libellee therefor and freely cohabited with her, and that ever since as well as before the dates of said alleged acts the libellee has been a faithful wife to the libellant.

Further answering the libellee says that if she committed all or any of the acts of adultery alleged in said libel, which she denies, or that if anything occurred between her and the said William G. Dudley which might appear to lead to the inference that she had committed any act of adultery with said Dudley, the same was caused, procured and connived at by the libellant, and the said libellee and the said Dudley were brought together by the libellant for the purpose of getting them into such a situation as would lead to an inference that said Dudley had committed adultery with her, and for the purpose of causing said Dudley and the libellee to commit adultery.

And further answering, the libellee says that the libellant at divers times between the date of said marriage and the filing of the said libel committed the crime of adultery with divers other persons whose names are unknown to the libellee.

And further answering, the libellee says that from time to time and at various times since she was married to the libellant as aforesaid, the libellant compelled her to associate with immoral and lewd persons.

WHEREFORE she says that the prayer of the libel should not be granted.

---	---

This matter having been brought on for hearing at a Special Term of this Court, held on the 14th day of February, 1920, at the County Court House in the City of Albany, Albany County, New York, and on reading and filing the summons and verified complaint and the affidavit of J. D., verified day of, 1920, from which it appears that the summons and complaint were duly and personally served upon the defendant within the state on the day of, 1920, (and that there was written upon the face of the copy of the summons delivered to the defendant the inscription "Action for a Divorce"); and on reading and filing the affidavit of J. D., verified the day of, 1920, from which it appears that the defendant is not in the military service of the United States as defined by Act of Congress, approved March 8, 1918; and on reading and filing the affidavit of J. D., verified the day of, 1920, from which it appears that more than twenty days have elapsed since the service upon the defendant of the summons and complaint herein, and that the defendant has failed to appear or plead herein, but has made default in appearing and pleading although the time so to do has heretofore fully expired, and has not been extended by stipulation by order of this Court or otherwise; and it further appearing that the defendant is of full age; and after hearing the allegations and proofs of the plaintiff and the Court having, after due deliberation, duly made its decision in writing:

NOW, ON MOTION OF X. Y., attorney for the plaintiff, it is ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that the plaintiff have final judgment, unless the Court shall otherwise order in the meantime, three months after the filing of the decision herein and the entry of this interlocutory judgment, dissolving the marriage solemnized between the plaintiff, A. B., and the defendant, C. B., on the 28th day of October, 1901, and divorcing the parties on the ground of the defendant's adultery and permitting the plaintiff to re-marry, but forbidding the defendant to re-marry any other person during the life-time of the plaintiff except with the permission of the Court; and it is further ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that the custody of D. B., the issue of said marriage, be and the same is hereby awarded to the plaintiff until and after final judgment, and it is further ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that the defendant, C. B., pay to the plaintiff, A. B., the sum of thirty-five dollars ($35) per month payable at her residence at the City of Albany, N. Y., for the support of herself and child until and after final judgment herein; and it is further

ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that this judgment is interlocutory only; and it is further ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that three months after the entry of this interlocutory judgment and the decision herein this interlocutory judgment shall become the final judgment herein, as of course, unless for sufficient cause the Court in the meantime shall have otherwise ordered,

(ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that final judgment shall not be entered in this action until after the expiration of three months from the entry and filing of the decision and this interlocutory judgment, and that within thirty days after the expiration of said three months final judgment shall be entered upon said decision and interlocutory judgment unless otherwise ordered by the Court); and it is further ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED that the plaintiff recover of the defendant costs in the sum of dollars ($.....) as taxed, but judgment for same shall not be enforceable by execution or punishment until final judgment herein.

Final Judgment of Divorce.

(See Forms No. 35 and No. 67.)

No. 69.Petition to Vacate Decree on Ground that Decree Obtained by Fraud.

Respectfully represents Joseph H. Ball that heretofore on June 26, 1913, after a hearing on the same, it was decreed that the libel for divorce filed by your petitioner against his wife, Florence M. Ball, should be dismissed and that said libel was dismissed.

And your petitioner says that the said decree dismissing his said libel was obtained by fraud and deceit practised upon this court and by the giving of false testimony as hereinafter set forth, and that by reason of the situation in the course of the said trial caused by the said false testimony and by reason of the manner in which the said cause was tried by the then counsel for your petitioner, your petitioner was deprived of a full and just hearing upon the said cause upon matters which would have constituted a good defence to the fraudulent attacks made upon him by means of said false testimony.

And your petitioner says that William J. Potter of Chelsea, in the County of Suffolk, testified at said hearing that on Sunday, March 30, 1913, at or about 1:10 or 1:15 in the morning, he saw your petitioner and a certain Blanche Stetson in a room on the first floor of the house at 717 Hillside Street in said Chelsea; that he saw them by standing on a bulkhead and looking through a curtain; that your petitioner and said Blanche Stetson were at that time only partly dressed; that after he had been looking four or five minutes the light in the room went out.

And your petitioner says that said Potter did not see the things which he testified he did see, as hereinbefore set out, but that the said testimony of said Potter as hereinbefore set out was false.

And your petitioner says that at the hearing hereinbefore referred to Robert C. Randall of said Chelsea testified that on March 31, 1913, at about quarter past five in the morning he saw your petitioner leaving the premises at 717 Hillside Street in said Chelsea and saw your petitioner take a car to Boston at about 5:30 in the morning on the same day.

And your petitioner says that said Randall did not see the things he testified he saw, as hereinbefore set out, but that the said testimony of said Randall was false.

And your petitioner says that Jessie B. Brown testified at the hearing hereinbefore referred to that on March 25, 1913, at about 12:30 in the morning she, being in the house at 414 Hillside Street in said Chelsea, saw your petitioner enter said house and go into the room where Blanche Stetson was.

And your petitioner says that said Brown did not see the things she testified she saw, as hereinbefore set forth, but that her testimony in those respects was false.

Wherefore your petitioner prays that the said decree of June 26, 1913, whereby his libel was dismissed may be set aside and that a new hearing on said libel may be granted.

V. SEPARATION FROM BED AND BOARD.

No. 70.

Complaint for Separation on Ground of Abandonment.

(Title of action.)

The complaint of the plaintiff herein respectfully shows to this court:

I. (Allegation as to marriage as in Form No. 71.)

II. (Allegation as to residence of parties, as required by section 1763 of the Code, as in Form No. 71.)

III. That, although the said plaintiff has always conducted himself toward the defendant as a faithful and loving husband, the said defendant disregarded her duties as a wife and on the day of, 19..., at which time the said plaintiff was seventy years old and in feeble condition of health and entirely alone, and without just cause or provocation, abandoned plaintiff and left and has been ever since wilfully absent from the said plaintiff's bed and board, although the said plaintiff has repeatedly requested the said defendant to return.

IV. That the issue of said marriage of the plaintiff and defendant are (state names and dates of birth of children, and also allege as to the unfitness of defendant to have the care and custody of such children, if they are minors).

Wherefore, the plaintiff demands judgment that a decree of separation may be made by this court ordering, directing and decreeing that said plaintiff and defendant live separate and apart forever (and where the children are minors ask judgment for their care and custody), besides the costs of this action, and such other and further relief as to this court may seem just and proper.

No. 71.

Complaint for Separation on Ground of Cruelty.

(Title of action.)

The complaint of the plaintiff herein respectfully shows to this court:

I. That on the day of, 19.., at, in the County of, and State of New York, the said plaintiff was married to the defendant.

II. That, at the time this action was commenced, the said plaintiff and defendant were and still are residents of this State. (Or state such other jurisdictional facts as are required by section 1763 of the Code.)

III. That since the said marriage the defendant has treated the plaintiff in a cruel and inhuman manner, and his conduct has been such as to render it improper and unsafe for her to cohabit with him, and, since the year, he has repeatedly committed acts of violence upon the plaintiff and her children, in particular, as follows:

1. On or about the day of, 19.., at, and also at her place of residence in the said city of, the defendant, without cause or provocation, falsely accused the plaintiff of soliciting the attention of men in an improper, lascivious and unchaste manner.

2. That on or about the day of, 19.., the defendant, without cause or provocation, falsely accused the plaintiff of carnal intimacy with one, who is a relative of the plaintiff.

3. That on or about the day of, 19.., at the City of aforesaid, the defendant, without cause or provocation, violently assaulted the plaintiff and threatened to kill her.

4. (Specify particularly, in successive paragraphs, the nature and circumstances of the defendant's misconduct, and set forth the time and place of each act complained of with reasonable certainty.)

IV. That since the marriage of the parties hereto, the plaintiff has given birth to the following children, who are now living with the plaintiff and who are the issue of said marriage, viz.: Julia B., a daughter, born on the day of, 19..; Clarence B., a son, born on the day of, 19.., and Benjamin H. B., a son, born on the day of, 19..; that the defendant herein is an unfit and improper person to have the care, custody, training and education of such children.

V. That as the plaintiff is informed and believes, the defendant is seized and possessed of real estate in the City of, County of, State of, of the value of dollars, and that he is possessed and is the owner of personal property at said city of the value of dollars; that the plaintiff has no means for her support and maintenance, but she and her children are now being supported by her father, with whom she resides.

Wherefore, the plaintiff demands judgment for a separation from the bed and board of the defendant, and that the custody of said children be awarded to the plaintiff and that a reasonable provision for the support of the plaintiff and her children and for the training and education of said children be made out of the property of the said defendant, and for the costs of this action and such other and further relief as to the court may seem just and proper.

Defendant.

The above-entitled action, having been duly brought on for trial at a Trial Term of the Supreme Court for the State of New York on the 20th day of January, 1921, before Mr. Justice Rosch, without a jury, and it appearing that the original issues herein were those made by the complaint of the plaintiff asking for an absolute divorce against the defendant, and the answer of the defendant in denial of the complaint, and by the counterclaim contained in defendant's said answer asking for a judgment of separation from bed and board against the plaintiff, and the plaintiff's reply in denial to such counterclaim, and the plaintiff having discontinued his action against the defendant, and the issues raised by defendant's counterclaim for separation having been tried by the Court on said January 20, 1921, and due proof of the facts and circumstances set forth in the said counterclaim having been made and due deliberation having been had, I do find and decide as follows:

FINDINGS OF FACT.

First. That the plaintiff and defendant were, at the commencement of this action, both residents of the State of New York.

Second. That the parties hereto were married and became husband and wife in the City of New York on or about July 7, 1915.

Third. That there is no issue of such marriage.

Fourth. That the plaintiff has, from the time of said marriage, neglected and refused to provide for the defendant and abandoned her.

Fifth. That the circumstances of the parties are such that defendant should have the sum of $12 per week paid to her by plaintiff as and for permanent alimony for her support and maintenance.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

First. That defendant is entitled to a decree dismissing the plaintiff's complaint and separating the parties hereto from bed and board with a provision therein that plaintiff pay to defendant $12 per week as and for permanent alimony for her support.

Second. That defendant have taxable costs of this action.

VI. ALIMONY AND COUNSEL FEES

No. 74.

Petition for Alimony Filed After Divorce Granted; Denied on Account of Second Wife.

RESPECTFULLY REPRESENTS Elizabeth W. Berry, of Lexington, in the County of Middlesex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Petitioner, that she was formerly the wife of Maybin W. Berry, now of Cambridge, in said County, Respondent, and was divorced from the bonds of matrimony on the twelfth day of May, 1911, by this Court at a sitting held at Boston, within and for the County of Suffolk;

THAT subsequent to the entering of a decree nisi in said divorce proceedings and before said decree became absolute, viz., on or about the 28d day of May, 1911, the said respondent undertook, by a promise made in writing to the said petitioner, to pay said petitioner nine dollars ($9.00) a week for the remainder of her life or until she should remarry, and under and in consequence of said promise said respondent has made regular payments to said petitioner until within a few weeks last past, when he wholly ceased to continue such payments;

THAT in consequence of said payments under said promise the said petitioner has hitherto never been obliged to apply, nor has, in fact, applied, to this Court for the payment of alimony;

THAT said petitioner is now wholly destitute;

THAT the said Maybin W. Berry has an income of at least $20 a week from one source, and is believed by said petitioner to have one or more other sources of income.

WHEREFORE, your petitioner prays that the said Maybin W. Berry may, by an order of this Court, be required to pay to your petitioner a reasonable sum for her support and maintenance during her life or until the further order of this Court, and such sums as may be necessary or proper for her to defray the costs and expenses of this suit, by way of counsel fees or otherwise, and for such other and further order as may be just.

and
J. Louis Wilson, Defendant.

This cause, coming on to be heard in the presence of Hall and Daley, Solicitors, for and of counsel with the complainant, and in the presence of Ralph E. Lewis, Esquire, Solicitor, for and of counsel with the defendant, Whereupon, and upon reading the bill of complaint, proofs and report of Hugh B. Rice, Esquire, one of the Special Masters of this Court to whom by previous order made in this cause it was referred to take depositions and other evidence, and to report, together with his opinion thereon, on the matter of alimony herein; from which and from the other proof produced it now appears to the satisfaction of the Chancellor that the complainant, Anna G. Wilson, and the defendant, J. Louis Wilson, were lawfully married on or about October 25, 1899; and that the defendant, without any justifiable cause, abandons the complainant and separates himself from her and refuses and neglects to maintain and provide for her; and that the defendant was personally served with process in this State;

It is thereupon, on this sixteenth day of February, 1918, by his Honor, Edwin Robert Wallace, Chancellor of the State of New Jersey, Ordered, adjudged and decreed that the defendant, J. Louis Wilson, do pay to the complainant, Anna G. Wilson, or to her Solicitors, the sum of Ten dollars per week from and after the date of the filing of the bill of complaint in this cause for and towards the support and maintenance of the complainant and her infant child, J. Louis Wilson, Jr., who is now in the custody of the complainant, and that the sums heretofore paid by the defendant for and towards the support of the complainant and her said infant child, J. Louis Wilson, Jr., under order of the court heretofore made on July 17, 1917, shall be credited upon the payments directed to be made under this order.

And it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed, that a copy of this decree be served forthwith upon the defendant, or his solicitor, and that within ten days after said service, the defendant do give bond to the said complainant in the sum of One thousand dollars, with sufficient surety or sureties, to be approved as to form and security by William A. Loud, Esquire, one of the Special Masters of this Court, for the punctual payments of the alimony and maintenance by this decree awarded to be paid, at the time and in the manner in this decree directed, and upon neglect or refusal of said defendant to give said bond, within the time so specified, or upon his default or that of his surety or sureties to pay the said sum or sums when the same shall fall due according to this decree, that the complainant be at liberty to apply to this Court to award and issue process of sequestration, or for such other process or order, as this Court may, under the circumstances, deem equitable and just, and as may be consistent with the power and authority of this Court.

And it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the said defendant do further pay to the complainant, or her solicitors, the costs of this suit to be taxed, and also the sum of One hundred dollars, which is hereby adjudged and decreed to be a reasonable counsel fee for the counsel of said complainant (in addition to the counsel fee allowed by said order of July 17, 1917, amounting to $100), and that the said complainant do have execution for said costs and counsel fee according to the practice of this Court.

NEW JERSEY, SS.

The State of New Jersey to the Sheriff of Our County of Passaic,

Greeting:

(Seal of the Court of Chancery,
State of New Jersey.)

Whereas, in and by a certain decree made in Our Court of Chancery before our Chancellor, on the 16th day of February, 1918, in a certain cause therein depending wherein

Anna G. Wilson is complainant and J. Louis Wilson is defendant:
It is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the complainant is entitled to receive the sum of $10 per week from August 16, 1915, the date of the filing of the bill of complaint in said cause, for the support and maintenance of complainant and her infant child, J. Louis Wilson, Jr., and that she is entitled to receive of the said defendant her costs of this suit to be taxed; and by said decree it was further ordered, adjudged and decreed that a copy of said decree be served upon the defendant, or her solicitor, and that within ten days after said service, the defendant give bond to the said complainant in the sum of $1,000 with sufficient surety and sureties, to be approved as to form and security by William A. Loud, Esquire, one of the Special Masters of this Court, for the punctual payments of the alimony and maintenance by said decree directed; and upon the neglect or refusal of said defendant to give said bond within the time so specified or upon his default or that of his surety or sureties to pay the said sum or sums when the same should fall due according to said decree that the complainant be at liberty to apply to this Court to award and issue processes of sequestration, or for such other processes or order as this court should, under the circumstances deem equitable and just, and as should be consistent with the power and authority of said Court, and that unless the defendant pay to the complainant or her solicitors her costs of this suit to be taxed that the complainant have execution for said costs according to the practice of this Court; and whereas it appears by affidavit that the said defendant was in arrears on the 23d of May, 1918, for the said alimony and maintenance in the sum of $1,248, and that the costs of said complainant have been duly taxed at $161.72, and we being satisfied that the said defendant has not complied with the terms of said decree and that demand has been made for said sum of $1,248 for arrears of alimony and maintenance and said sum of $161.72 taxed costs and that a certified copy of said decree and taxed bill of costs has been duly served on the defendant's solicitor;

Therefore, we command you that of the goods and chattels of the said defendant in your County you cause to be made the said sum of $1,248 for arrears of alimony and maintenance and said sum of $161.72 costs, together with the costs of this writ, and if sufficient goods and chattels of the said defendant in your County you cannot find, whereof to make the said sum of $1,248 and costs, together with the costs of this writ, then we further command you that of the lands, tenements, hereditaments and real estate whereof said defendant was seized on the 16th day of February, 1918, or at any time afterwards, in wheresoever hands the same may be, you cause to be made the whole or the residue, as the case may require, of the said sum of $1,248, with costs as aforesaid, and the costs of this writ; and that you have those moneys before our Chancellor in our said Court of Chancery, in Trenton, on the 31st day of August, 1918, to render to the said complainant, and also the surplus money, if any there be, to abide the further order of our said Court; and you are to make return at the time and place aforesaid by certificate under your hand, of the manner in which you have executed this writ, together with this writ.

Witness the Honorable Edwin Robert Wallace, our Chancellor, at Trenton, this 31st day of May, in the year 1918.

Answer to Plaintiff's Bill.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Superior Court,
Franklin, ss.
August 1, 1918.

Anna G. Wilson,

against

J. Louis Wilson.

DEFENDANT'S ANSWER TO THE PLAINTIFF'S BILL.

And now comes the defendant in the above entitled case and without waiving his demurrer to said bill makes the following answer.

In answer to the first paragraph of the Plaintiff's Bill the defendant neither admits or denies the same but leaves the plaintiff to prove the same.

In answer to the second paragraph of the Plaintiff's Bill the defendant denies the allegations therein contained and requires that the plaintiff prove the same.

In answer to the third paragraph of the Plaintiff's Bill the defendant denies the allegations therein contained and requires that the plaintiff prove the same.

In answer to the fourth paragraph of the Plaintiff's Bill the defendant denies the allegations therein contained and further answering says that no proper or legal service or any service has been made upon him whereby a judgment could be properly entered against him in said Court.

And the defendant further answering says that in the present proceedings the courts of this Commonwealth have no jurisdiction.

Decree Modifying Order as to Support and Custody of Children.

That so much of the original decree relating to the support of the minor children and the necessary medical attention of the children be modified and revised as follows:

That the libellee shall pay to the libellant on the first day of each month the sum of fifty-five (55) dollars, which sum shall be used for the support, maintenance, and providing the necessary medical attention for said minor children.

That part of the original decree relating to visits to the children or visits by the children at the home of the libellee be modified and revised as follows:

That the libellee shall have the privilege to visit the children once a week; and to have Nelson B. Pomeroy visit him for one week once in every three months; and to have Henrietta M. Pomeroy visit at the home of her grandmother or aunt one week in every three months in his absence, or, if such visits are made in his presence, that she be accompanied by her mother, if the mother so desires.

By the Court,

EDWARD E. HOLLAND,

Clerk.

This decree is to take effect as of February 26, 1913, with the modification that a further decree is to be made that the mother is to be allowed to make the selection of proper medical attendance for the care of said children, which modification is to take effect as of the last Monday of December, 1910.

Proceedings for Separate Support Praying for Protection Against Restraint on Personal Liberty, Separate Support and Attachment of Property.

To the Honorable the Judges of the Probate Court in and for the County of Middlesex:

Respectfully represents Faustina F. Shelley, of Waltham, in the County of Middlesex, that she is the lawful wife of Obed C. Shelley, of said Waltham, that her husband fails, without just cause, to furnish suitable support for her, and has deserted her; and that she is living apart from her said husband for justifiable cause, and she herein sets forth the following specifications: desertion, cruel and abusive treatment, March 30, 1904. Adultery with Mrs. A. F. Gerry on the 12th day of July, 1904, and divers other days and times between said 12th day of July, 1904, and July 19th, 1904, at said Waltham.

Wherefore your petitioner prays that said court will, by its order, prohibit her said husband from imposing any restraint on her personal liberty, and make such order as it deems expedient concerning her support, and that the personal estate of the said Obed C. Shelley in the hands and possession of Alonzo D. White and Hollis E. Dennis, both of said Waltham, may be attached by trustee process to the value of two thousand dollars, in order to secure a suitable support and maintenance to your petitioner.

Dated this twenty-sixth day of November, A. D. 1904.

Middlesex, ss. Probate Court. March 8, 1905. Ordered that respondent pay to the petitioner to enable her to prosecute her petition the sum of fifty dollars forthwith, and it is further ordered that pending this petition, and until the further order of the court, he pay her on each Wednesday after this day the sum of twenty-five dollars.

GEO. F. LAWRENCE,

Judge of Probate Court.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Middlesex, ss.

At a Probate Court holden at Lowell, in and for said County of Middlesex, on the seventeenth day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and five.

On the petition of Faustina F. Shelley, of Waltham in said County, the wife of Obed C. Shelley, of said Waltham, praying that said Court will, by its order, prohibit her said husband from imposing any restraint on her personal liberty, and make such order as it deems expedient concerning her support.

Due notice of said petition having been given to the said Obed C. Shelley, the case was continued for hearing, and now on this twenty-fourth day of June, A. D. 1905, to which time the same was continued;

It appearing to the Court that on March 30, 1904, the said Obed C. Shelley abusively treated the petitioner; that he has deserted her; and that said petitioner for justifiable cause is actually living apart from her said husband;

It is ordered that the temporary order of March 8th, 1905, do now cease; that said husband be and he hereby is prohibited from imposing any restraint on the personal liberty of said petitioner, and that he pay to said petitioner for the support of herself the sum of five hundred and twenty-five dollars forthwith, and the further sum of one hundred and twenty-five dollars on the last Saturday of each month hereafter until the further order of said court.

Affidavit; Application for Alimony and Counsel Fees.

(Title of Action.)

STATE OF NEW YORK, }
ALBANY COUNTY, } ss.:

A. B., being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I. That she is the plaintiff herein and has brought this action against the defendant, her husband, for a limited divorce or judgment of separation between them, upon the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment, and of such conduct, on the part of the defendant, toward the plaintiff, as renders it unsafe and improper for her to cohabit with him, as more fully appears by the complaint hereto annexed.

II. That this action was commenced by the service upon the defendant on the day of, 19.., of a summons and complaint, as appears by the affidavit of X. K., hereto annexed; that she will be able to substantiate all the allegations of the complaint by proof on the trial, and that she has a good cause of action thereon, as she is advised by her counsel, L. M., who resides and has his office at, county of, State of New York, and as she verily believes.

III. That since said marriage, the defendant has treated the plaintiff in a cruel and inhuman manner, and since the year he has repeatedly committed acts of cruelty and violence upon her and upon her children, as follows, to wit: (here set forth the facts fully).

IV. That your deponent is wholly destitute of the means of supporting herself or her children pending this action or of carrying on the same and defraying the costs and expenses thereof.

V. That the defendant herein is seized and possessed of real estate of the value of dollars, and personal property of the value of dollars, as deponent is informed and believes, which is sufficient to enable him to advance therefrom to your petitioner such sums as may be necessary for the above-mentioned purposes; that deponent is informed and believes that the defendant herein is engaged in the mercantile business, at, as a dry goods merchant, and that he has or claims to have a large trade or business in connection therewith, and that he has a large annual income therefrom.

VI. That the issue of the marriage of the parties hereto, now living with the plaintiff, is three children, as follows: (state names, and dates of birth of children); and the plaintiff alleges that the defendant is an unfit and improper person to have the care, custody, training and education of such children.

Wherefore, deponent asks that the said defendant may, by an order of this court, be required to pay to deponent a reasonable sum for her support and maintenance, and for the support and maintenance of her children during the pendency of this action, and such sums as may be necessary to enable deponent to carry on this action, and to defray the necessary costs and expenses thereof, and for such other and further order as may be just.

(Title of action.)

To the Supreme Court:

In pursuance of the order of this court, made and entered in the above-entitled action on the day of, 19.., by which it was referred to me, to inquire (here state substance of the order), I do respectfully report:

That I have been attended by the parties and their counsel, and have heard their proofs and allegations, and after due deliberation thereon I find as matters of fact:

1. That the defendant is seized and possessed of the following real property, to-wit: An apartment house, situated on street, in the city of, county of, State of (giving brief description of same), which is of the value of dollars, and the annual rents and profits of which are dollars.

2. That he is also possessed of shares of stock in the company, of the par value of dollars each, the actual value of which is dollars, and the annual dividends from which for the past ten years have averaged each year the sum of dollars.

(State and briefly describe as above other property possessed by the defendant.)

3. That such defendant is engaged in the mercantile business, owning and conducting a store for the sale of dry goods, at street, in the city of, State of, the profits of which business during the preceding year were dollars.

4. That the following children were born of the marriage of the plaintiff and the defendant in this action (state names and dates of birth of children), and that of such children, the following reside with the plaintiff and are in her care, custody and control.

I also further report that in my opinion the defendant herein should be required to pay to the plaintiff for her support and maintenance, and for the support, maintenance and education of the children residing with her, a sum of dollars per month, during the pendency of this action; and that such sum should be paid to her on the first day of each month from the date of the order directing such payment.

And I also further report that in my opinion the sum of dollars would be a proper sum to be allowed the plaintiff for the purpose of enabling her to prosecute this action and to defray the necessary costs and expenses thereof.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus for Detention of Child.

SUPREME COURT — COUNTY OF

The People of the State of New York

vs. rel. A. B.,

against

J. B., E. B., and P. B.

To the Supreme Court of the State of New York, or to any justice thereof:

The petition of A. B. respectfully shows to the court:

I. That the petitioner is a resident and inhabitant of the State of New York, residing at, in the city of, in said State; and that he is engaged in the business of, in such city.

II. That on the day of, 19.., the above-named petitioner was married to the said J. B., at, in the city of, State of; and that two children were born as the issue of such marriage, to-wit: Anna B., on the day of, 19.., and John B., on the day of, 19...

III. That the said children, Anna B. and John B., being infants of tender years, are imprisoned and restrained in their liberty by the above-named defendants, J. B., E. B., and P. B., at, in the city of

IV. That the said infants have not been committed, nor are they detained by virtue of any process, judgment, decree, final order or mandate issued by any court of the United States, or of any judge thereof, nor are they committed or detained by virtue of the final judgment or decree of a competent tribunal of civil or criminal jurisdiction, or the final order of such a tribunal made in a special proceeding instituted for any cause except to punish him for contempt; nor by virtue of an execution or other process issued upon such a judgment, decree, or final order, according to the best knowledge and belief of your petitioner.

V. That the said petitioner and his wife, the said J. B., are living in a state of separation without being divorced; and the said E. B. and P. B. (state relationship of parties, etc.).

VI. That your petitioner is entitled by law to the absolute and exclusive control of the said children, and that the imprisonment and restraint of such children by the said J. B., E. B., and P. B., is illegal, and that the said children are thereby subjected to unfit, improper, and harmful influences.

VII. (State particular reasons, in detail, why the children should not remain in the custody of the defendants.)

VIII. That your petitioner is abundantly able to provide for the support, maintenance, and education of such children. (State with some certainty the financial condition of the petitioner.) But that the said J. B. and the defendants E. B. and P. B., are financially unable to properly provide for the support, maintenance and education of such children.

IX. That no previous application has been made by me for a writ of habeas corpus to secure the custody of such children.

Wherefore, your petitioner prays that a writ of habeas corpus issue, directed to J. B., E. B., and P. B., hereinbefore referred to, commanding them to produce my said children, Anna B. and John B., before this court, together with the cause of their imprisonment and detention by them, and that this court make an order herein awarding to me the custody of my said children, and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem just and proper.

And your petitioner will ever pray.

Return to Writ of Habeas Corpus.

(Title.)

To the Supreme Court of the State of New York:

I, J. B., to whom the writ of habeas corpus issued herein is directed, do hereby make return thereto, as follows:

I. I was, as stated in the petition of the above-named A. B., married to the said A. B. on the day of, 19..; and the children of such marriage, Anna B. and John B., infants of tender years, to-wit: of the age of five and seven years, respectively, are residing with me at the home of my parents, the above-named E. B. and P. B., at, in the city of, State of New York.

II. I deny that the petitioner is entitled by law to the absolute and exclusive control of such children, and that they are in any way illegally restrained or imprisoned, or that because of the custody and control of such children by me, that they are subjected to unfit, improper, and harmful influences.

III. Such children are of tender years, and are at an age when they must especially need the care and control of a mother, (and state other reasons in detail, why the children should remain under the control of their mother and their grandparents).

IV. (State as to financial ability to provide for the support and education of such children.)

V. (State reasons why it is not safe or proper for the children to be placed in the custody of the father, and any other matter which can be shown in favor of the retention of the children.)

Order Confirming Adoption from Charitable Institution.

At a Surrogate's Court, held in and for the County of Albany, at the County Court House, in the City of Albany, Albany County, N. Y., on the 16th day of December, A. D. 1920.

Present: Hon. ELLIS J. STALEY, Surrogate.

In the Matter of the Adoption of E. F., a Minor, by A. B. and C. B., his Wife.

On the 16th day of December, 1920, A. B. and C. B., his wife, who reside in the County of Albany, N. Y., foster parents of E. F., a minor, having appeared before me, together with the said E. F., said minor, whose adoption is applied for in this proceeding, and the said A. B. and C. B. having presented to me an instrument containing substantially the consents required by the Domestic Relations Law relating to the adoption of children, and having duly presented to me an agreement on the part of the said foster parents to adopt and treat the said minor as their own lawful child, and containing a statement of the age of the said person to be adopted, and reciting that a change of the name of said minor is desired from E. F. to D. B., and the said A. B. and C. B. having been examined by me, and it appearing that the said child is in the lawful custody of the State Charities Aid Association, a corporation duly incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, and empowered to place children in homes for adoption, and it further appearing that the mother of said child was unable to care for her and surrendered and abandoned her to said State Charities Aid Association for the purposes of adoption on February 20, 1920, and that the mother of said child and said child had previously been deserted and abandoned by the father, and that the said mother surrendered said child to the State Charities Aid Association by an instrument in writing dated the 20th day of February, 1920, for the purpose of adoption, with the understanding that the said Association was to provide the said infant with a home in the United States until it shall reach the age of twenty-one years, and it further appearing that the said child is by religious faith a Protestant, and that the said A. B. and C. B. are Protestants, and that the said State Charities Aid Association has investigated the circumstances of A. B. and C. B., and have found that their reputation, moral character and station in life is good, and that said minor child, if adopted by them, will be given a comfortable home and fine treatment, and that its welfare will be promoted.

Now, therefore, on reading and filing the consent and agreement of the State Charities Aid Association and A. B. and C. B., dated the 3rd day of December, 1920, and the affidavit of J. D., dated the 3rd day of December, 1920, and the surrender of E. F. dated February 20, 1920, and being satisfied that the moral and temporal interests of the said E. F. will be promoted by the adoption of her by A. B. and C. B., his wife, and being also satisfied that there is no reasonable objection to the change of name of E. F. to D. B., it is ORDERED, that the said A. B. and C. B., his wife, take the said E. F. into the relation of child, and acquire the rights and incur the responsibilities of parent in respect to said minor, and that the adoption of said E. F. by the said A. B. and C. B. is hereby in all respects ratified and confirmed. And it is further

ORDERED, AND I HEREBY DIRECT, that the said E. F. shall henceforth be regarded and treated in all respects as the child of A. B. and C. B., the foster parents of the said child. And it is further ORDERED, AND I HEREBY DIRECT, that the name of the said E. F. be and the same is hereby changed to D. B., and she shall be hereafter known by the said name, D. B.

Consent and Agreement; Adoption from Charitable Institution.

SURROGATE'S COURT — ALBANY COUNTY.

(Title.)

THIS AGREEMENT made the 3rd day of December, 1920, by and between A. B. and C. B., his wife, residing at Albany, Albany County, New York, both adults, hereinafter called the "foster parents," and State Charities Aid Association, of New York, a corporation duly incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, and empowered to place children in homes for adoption, and having its principal offices in the Borough of Manhattan, City and County of New York,

WITNESSETH:

Whereas the said foster parents desire to adopt, pursuant to the provisions of the "Domestic Relations Law," a minor child known as E. F., born on or about the 30th day of January, 1920; and

Whereas the said foster parents, if permitted to adopt said child, agree to treat such child as their own lawful child and accord to such child all the rights, benefits and privileges of such relationship; and

Whereas the said child is now lawfully in the care and custody of the said State Charities Aid Association; and

Whereas the said State Charities Aid Association has investigated the circumstances and character of the said foster parents with reference to the moral and temporal interests of the child whose adoption is proposed and approves of its adoption by the aforesaid foster parents;

Now, Therefore, the parties hereto mutually agree, covenant and consent:

First: The said foster parents jointly and severally covenant and agree to adopt and treat E. F., the said minor as his, her and their own lawful child and to accord to such minor child all the rights, benefits and privileges of such relationship and to fulfill all the duties and responsibilities of parents with respect to such minor child.

Second: State Charities Aid Association hereby consents to such adoption and surrenders its custody of said child and covenants and agrees to refrain from doing or causing to be done any act or thing whatsoever inconsistent therewith or in any way to interfere with such child when adopted or the foster parents aforesaid; and further consents that the name of the child be changed to D. B.

In Witness Whereof, the parties hereto have severally set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

J D., being duly sworn, deposes and says: that he is Secretary of State Charities Aid Association, a corporation duly incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, and empowered to place children in homes for adoption and that he is familiar with the records of said Association; that the following statement is made upon information and belief and that the source of his information and the grounds of his belief are the records of said Association, the examination of official records by officers and agents of the said Association and their reports and investigations and that he believes the following statement to be true:

The above named minor, E. F., was born on or about the 30th day of January, 1920; the religious faith of the child is Protestant.

The circumstances of A. B. and C. B., his wife, who seek to adopt the said minor child with respect to its moral and temporal welfare have been investigated and it has been found that the religious faith of the said persons is Protestant; their reputation good; their character moral and their station and means in life such that the said minor child if adopted by them will be given a comfortable home and kind treatment and its welfare will be promoted.

Since the 22nd day of April, 1920, the said child has been in the care and keeping of the said persons who propose to adopt it and has been properly cared for and well treated.

The said minor child came into the custody of State Charities Aid Association by reason of the following facts:

The mother of said child was unable to care for her and surrendered her to the State Charities Aid Association for purposes of adoption on February 20, 1920; that the mother and child had previously been deserted by the father.

That the surrender of the said E. F. by her mother is hereto annexed.

Complaint in Action for Dower.

SUPREME COURT — COUNTY OF

A. D.

against

L. D., E. D., and C. D., as Administrators of the Estate of D. D., Deceased (or, as Executor, etc.).

The complaint of the above-named plaintiff respectfully shows:

I. That the plaintiff, A. D., was married to D. D., deceased, late of the city of, county of, State of New York, on the day of, 18...., and lived and cohabited with him as his wife until he died on the day of, 19....

II. That the said D. D. died intestate leaving him surviving the plaintiff, his widow, and two children, L. D., a son and E. D., a son; (or that the said D. D. died leaving a last will and testament which was duly admitted to probate on the day of, 19..., by the Surrogate of the County of Albany, State of New York, in which county the said D. D. resided at the time of his death, and that C. D. was named executor in said will, and on the day of, 19..., letters testamentary duly issued to the said C. D. appointing him as executor under said will, and he, thereupon, duly qualified as executor thereof, and became and ever since has been and now is acting as such); that, thereafter, and on or about the day of, 19...., letters of administration were duly issued and granted to the plaintiff by the Surrogate of the County of Albany, in which county said D. D. resided at the time of his death, and that said C. D. was duly appointed as administrator of the goods, chattels and credits of said deceased, and said C. D., thereupon, duly qualified as such administrator and entered upon the performance of his duties, and then became and ever since has been and now is acting as such administrator.

III. That the said D. D., was seized and possessed at the time of his death of the following described real estate (describe property with common certainty by setting forth the name of the township or tract, and the number of the lot, if there is any, or in some other appropriate manner; so that from the description, possession of the property claimed may be delivered.)

IV. That the defendants L. D. and E. D., upon the death of the said D. D., were and are in actual possession and occupation of the real estate above described and claim to be the owners thereof as the heirs-at-law of the said D. D. (If the premises are not actually occupied by the defendants named, but such defendants are exercising certain acts of ownership thereon, or claiming title thereto, or interest therein, at the time of the commencement of the action, it should be so stated, with a description of the acts of ownership so exercised. If there are other persons claiming title to or right to the possession of the property, they should be made defendants and the facts in relation thereto set forth.)

V. (If damages are claimed for withholding dower, an allegation should be inserted to the following effect: That the means profits of the above-described premises, since the death of the said D. D., is the sum of dollars; that no part of the one-third portion thereof, of which this plaintiff is entitled, has been paid to her by the said defendants L. D. and E. D.)

(If the action is against any other person than an heir-at-law, the amount of the profits should be alleged from the date when the plaintiff demanded her dower of the defendant in possession of the premises, and such demand should be alleged.)

Wherefore, the plaintiff demands judgment, that as widow of the said D. D., deceased, she is entitled to her dower in all the real estate above described; that her said dower in said described premises may be set off and admeasured to her by a referee to be appointed for that purpose, or in such other manner as this court may direct; and that she may recover from the above-named defendants, as damages for withholding her said dower, the sum of dollars, together with the costs of this action, and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem just and proper.

Report of Referee for the Admeasurement of Dower.

(Title of Action.)

To the Supreme Court:

I, the undersigned, D. F., the referee appointed by an interlocutory judgment herein, dated the day of, 19.., and entered in the office of the County Clerk of the County of, on the day of, 19.., to admeasure the plaintiff's dower in the premises therein described, and to ascertain the value of such dower and to report to this court the respective amounts so ascertained, with all due and convenient speed, do hereby report:

I. That before proceeding with the hearing of the matter so referred to me, I took and filed the oath prescribed by law.

II. On the day of, 19.., I attended at the premises described in such judgment, and the plaintiff, A. D., by her attorney, L. M., and the defendants, L. D., E. D., and C. D., by their attorney, C. P., appeared before me at the time and place aforesaid and pointed out to me the boundaries of the said property and the permanent improvements made thereupon after the death of the said plaintiff's husband.

III. And I further report that in my opinion it is not for the best interests of all the parties concerned to admeasure and lay off to the said A. D., the plaintiff herein, a distinct part of said property, for the following reasons: (Here state with certainty why it is not practicable for the best interests of the parties to lay off a distinct parcel as the dower of the plaintiff.)

IV. And I further report that under a stipulation of the respective parties herein, I attended at, in the City of, State of New York, on the day of, 19.., and took testimony of certain witnesses to ascertain the rental value of said property, which said stipulation and testimony, signed by the said witnesses, is hereto annexed.

V. And I further report that after hearing the testimony of the witnesses as aforesaid, to ascertain the rental value of the said property, and after hearing L. M., of counsel for the said plaintiff, and C. P., of counsel for the said defendants, and after due consideration of all the evidence before me in this matter, I find that the annual rental value of said property, independent of the improvements made thereupon by the said defendants, since the death of D. D., the deceased husband of the said plaintiff, was the sum of dollars for the year, and that the annual rental value of said property since such time has been and still is the sum of dollars.

VI. The items of my charges herein are:

1. For one day attending at said property to see if admeasure-ment could be made.....	$.....
2. For three days' services in taking testimony to ascertain the annual rental value of said property.....
3. For one day's services in preparing this report.....
4. For traveling expenses.....

No. 108.Final Judgment Admeasuring Dower.

At a Special Term of the Supreme Court, etc.

(Title of Action.)

The above-entitled action having heretofore been duly brought to trial at a Trial Term of this court, held in and for the County of, at, in the City of, commencing on the day of, 19.., and trial by jury having been waived in open court, and trial having been had and the decision of the court made and filed, and an interlocutory judgment having been rendered and entered in the office of the County Clerk of County, on the day of, 19.., by which judgment D. F. was appointed referee to admeasure the plaintiff's dower in the premises described in such judgment, and who pursuant to stipulation took testimony to ascertain the rental value of said premises, and the report of said referee having been duly filed in the office of the County Clerk of County, on the day of, 19.., and said report having been confirmed by an order of this court, dated the day of, 19.., and entered in the office of the County Clerk of County, on the day of, 19..,

Now, after hearing L. M., of counsel for the plaintiff, and C. P., of counsel for the defendants, in opposition thereto, and on motion of L. M., attorney for the plaintiff, it is ADJUDGED (1) That the report of the said D. F., as referee, be and the same is hereby in all respects confirmed.

(2) That the plaintiff herein is entitled to dower in the premises described in the complaint as follows: (Insert description.)

(3) That upon the evidence taken by the said referee, D. F., in relation to the rental value of said premises, the rental value thereof for the year, was the sum of dollars, and that the annual rental value of such premises since such time has been and still is the sum of dollars, independent of taxes or other charges.

(4) That the defendants L. D. and E. D., pay to the plaintiff the sum of dollars per year, on the first day of January of each year during her life, as and for her dower in the said premises, and that said sum so to be paid be and remain a charge upon the said property during the natural life of plaintiff.

(5) That one-third of the annual value of the mesne profits of such premises is dollars.

(6) That the plaintiff, A. D., recover of the defendants, L. D. and E. D., the sum of dollars, as damages for withholding said plaintiff's dower from the day of, 19.., to the date hereof, with the additional sum of dollars as and for her costs in this action, and her disbursements herein, to be hereafter taxed by the clerk.
